The Night Everything Changed

Chennai, India. A college auditorium. 7:42 PM.

The lights were dim. The projector screen glowed blue. Three hundred students sat in plastic chairs, their phones hidden under their thighs, their minds floating somewhere between Instagram reels and placement anxiety.

Among them sat five students who would never be the same.

Arjun — the topper, the gold medalist, the boy every parent wanted as a son. He had three job offers already. His father was a government clerk. His mother was a school teacher. They had sacrificed everything for his education.

Priya — the girl with 8.5 CGPA, the one who never missed a deadline, the one who already had a TCS offer letter saved in her phone. She had bought an iPhone on EMI before she even got her first salary.

Rohan — the backbencher, the 6.2 CGPA boy, the one professor had given up on. His father owned a small garment shop that was struggling. His mother sold homemade pickles on Instagram.

Neha — the quiet one, the girl who spoke little but observed everything. She had secretly been making YouTube videos for six months. No one knew. No one watched.

Vikram — the rich kid, the one whose father owned a factory with 200 employees. He had a BMW at 21. He was also the most lost person in the room.

They had come for a "motivational talk." They expected PowerPoint slides. They expected success mantras. They expected someone to tell them how to get a job at Google.

They got none of that.

Instead, a man walked onto the stage. No notes. No slides. Just a microphone and a fire in his belly.

His name was not important. What he said was.

He looked at the three hundred faces. He saw the fear. He saw the hope. He saw the cats pretending to be lions.

And he began to speak.

CHAPTER ONE

The First Bite:
How Salary Becomes an Addiction

The First Bite

"The first money you earn is going to be very, very special."

The speaker's voice was calm. But his words were not.

He said: "Close your eyes. Remember the first time you held money you earned. Was it a crisp note? A digital transfer? Did you feel powerful?"

The students closed their eyes. Some smiled. Some nodded.

Then the speaker's voice changed. It became harder. Sharper.

"Now open your eyes. Because I am going to tell you something that will ruin that memory forever."

He paused. The auditorium was silent.

> "That first money is either your wings or your cage."

The Girl Who Got the Job

Let me tell you about Priya.

Priya was from Pune. She was an engineer. She was a good girl. She listened to her parents. She studied hard. She got 8.5 CGPA. She sat for placements.

And she got a job.

TCS. 3.5 LPA. First salary: ₹29,000.

The day the offer letter came, her mother cried. Her father hugged her. Her neighbors said, “Beta, you have done well.”

Priya felt happy. She felt successful. She felt like she had arrived.

She got 200 likes.

Her DMs filled with “Congrats” messages. Her relatives called. Her father told the entire neighborhood.

Priya was on top of the world.

She did not know that she had just walked into a cage.

The Bite That Changed Everything

Priya bought an iPhone 15 on EMI. Because she deserved it.

She rented a flat in Hinjewadi. Because she was an adult now.

She ordered Swiggy every night. Because she was tired after work.

She bought a scooty. Because the bus was “too much effort.”

She started going out for brunches with colleagues. Because “office culture.”

Two years passed.

Priya’s salary grew to 4.2 LPA. But her expenses grew to 4.5 LPA. She had credit card debt. She had EMIs. She had a life she could not afford to leave.

She wanted to quit. She wanted to start her own thing. She wanted to breathe.

But she could not.

The EMIs would eat into her income, and the rent was due. Because the iPhone needed to be paid for. Because the scooty loan was still running.

Priya was not poor. Priya was trapped.

And the trap had a name: The First Salary.

Freedom is not what you buy. It is what you keep.

The Boy Who Refused the Bite

In the same college, in the same batch, there was Rohan.

Rohan was not a good student. His CGPA was 6.2. His parents were worried. His professors had given up on him.

His father's garment shop was barely surviving. His mother sold pickles on Instagram — maybe 20 bottles a month. The family was one bad month away from disaster.

When placement season came, Rohan did not register.

His father called him. "Beta, what are you doing? We have no money. You need a job."

Rohan said, "Papa, I want to try something else."

His father screamed. His mother cried. His uncle sent a long WhatsApp message about "responsibility."

Rohan did not listen.

He started an Instagram page. He reviewed local street food. Chai. Vada pav. Pani puri. Misal pav. He posted every day. He talked to the camera like he was talking to a friend.

Sometimes, not taking the usual path is the bravest step. ♡

A Camera A Street

The First Month

The first month, he got 200 followers. His friends laughed.

“Bhai, kya kar raha hai? TCS jaata toh 29k milta.”

Rohan said nothing. He posted again.

The third month, he got 5,000 followers. A local cafe paid him ₹2,000 for a post.

His friends stopped laughing.

The sixth month, he got 50,000 followers. Brands paid him ₹15,000 per post.

His friends started asking for advice.

The ninth month, he got 2 lakh followers. He started his own small cloud kitchen. He sold the same chai and vada pav he reviewed.

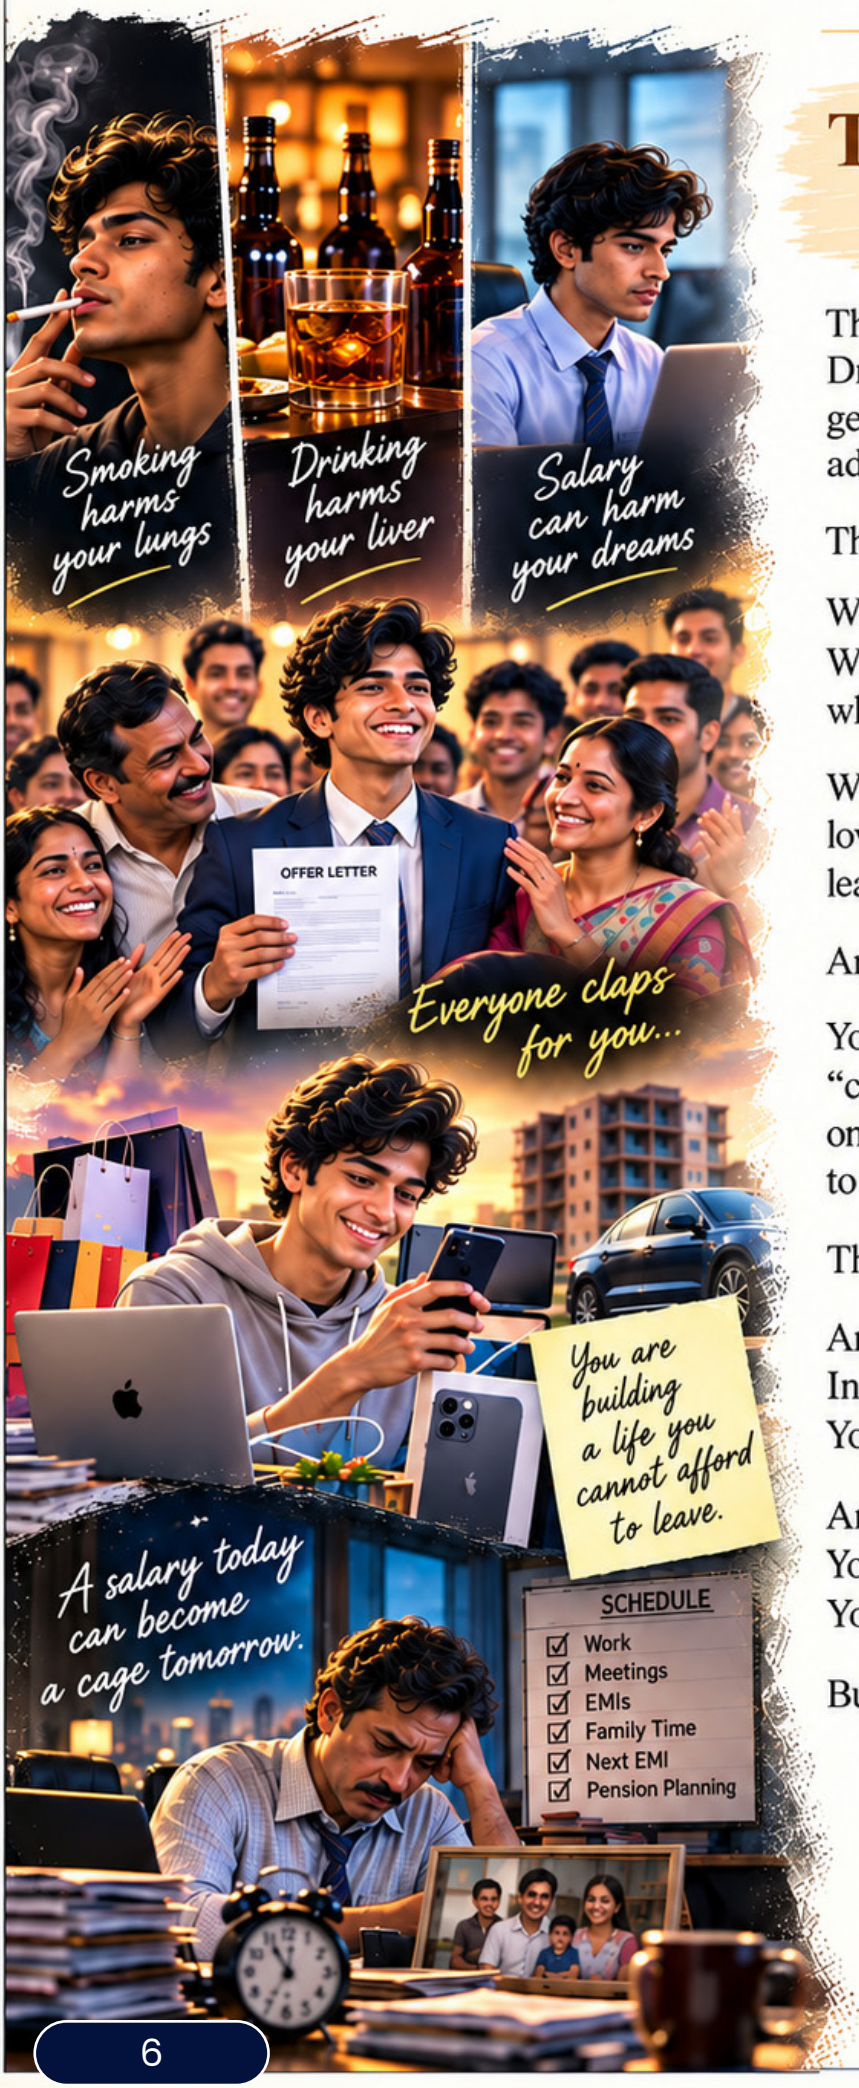
His first month’s income from the cloud kitchen was ₹45,000. Some months it was ₹10,000. Some months it was ₹1 lakh. It was never the same. It was never safe.

But Rohan had no EMI. Rohan had no boss. Rohan had a following.

And most importantly: Rohan was free.

His mother still made pickles. But now, she sold 500 bottles a month — through Rohan’s Instagram.

Freedom looks different for everyone. ♡



The Addiction No One Talks About

The speaker said: “Smoking is addiction. Drinking is addiction. I am telling you, getting a monthly salary is the biggest addiction.”

Think about it.

When you smoke, you harm your lungs. When you drink, you harm your liver. But when you take a salary, you harm your dreams.

With every monthly credit, your brain learns to love safety. Your spine learns to bend. Your voice learns to say “yes” when you want to say “no.”

And the worst part? Everyone claps for you.

Your parents say “well done.” Your friends say “congratulations.” Your college puts your name on a placement list. Your relatives compare you to their children.

They are all celebrating your cage.

And you are smiling. You are posting on Instagram. You are buying things on EMI. You are building a life you cannot afford to leave.

And one day, you wake up at 45. You have a house. You have a car. You have a family. You have EMIs. You have a boss. You have a pension.

But you do not have a life. You have a schedule.

Don't just earn a living, make a life. ♡

The Science of the Trap

Why is salary so addictive?

Because of something called the "hedonic treadmill."

You get your first salary: ₹29,000.
You are happy.

Six months later, ₹29,000 feels normal.
You need ₹35,000 to feel the same happiness.

You get a promotion. ₹45,000.
You are happy again.

Six months later, ₹45,000 feels normal.
You need ₹55,000.

This never ends. Your happiness resets to zero every six months. But your expenses never reset. They only grow.

And every time you take a step up the ladder, the ladder gets longer.

The speaker called this "the cat chasing its tail." The cat runs faster and faster. The tail stays just out of reach. The cat never asks: "Why am I running?"

More money doesn't always mean a happier you. Pause. Reflect. Chosse wisely.

The 6-Month Test

The speaker stopped. He looked at the three hundred faces.

He said: "I want you to ask yourself a question. A hard question. A question that might keep you awake tonight."

He paused.

"If your salary stopped today, would you panic or would you pivot?"

The auditorium was silent.

"If the answer is panic, you are not free. You are a cat with a bowl. You have built a life that depends on someone else's signature. Someone else's approval. Someone else's mood.

If your answer is pivot, you are a lion in training. You have built skills. You have built a network. You have built something that belongs to you. You can feed yourself."

Priya's answer was panic.
Rohan's answer was pivot.

Which one are you?

Same question. Two different futures. The answer decides your freedom.

The Lesson of the Lion Cub

The old storytellers say: When a lion cub is born, its mother does not bring it meat. The mother makes the cub hunt. The first kill is hard. The first kill is scary. The cub fails many times. The cub goes hungry many nights.

But that first kill teaches the cub something no one else can teach:

"You can feed yourself."

The cat, on the other hand, is given milk in a bowl. The cat never hunts. The cat never learns. The cat waits for the bowl to be filled every morning.

And the cat calls this "security."

Priya had a bowl. Rohan had hunger.

Priya had a salary. Rohan had a following.

Priya was a cat.
Rohan was becoming a lion.

Hunger builds strength.
Comfort builds dependence.
Choose your path.

The Five Signs You Are Already Trapped

The speaker listed five signs. He said: "If any of these sound familiar, you are already in the cage."

1 You check your bank balance before you check your dreams.

You wake up and the first thing you think is "how much money do I have?" Not "what do I want to build today?"

2 You have stopped creating. You only consume.

You scroll Instagram. You watch Netflix. You order Swiggy. You do not make anything. You do not write. You do not code. You do not sell. You do not build.

3 Your expenses grew faster than your income.

You got a raise. You bought a bigger phone. You got another raise. You bought a car. Your lifestyle is a thief. It steals your freedom before you even notice.

4 You cannot take a break.

You have not taken a vacation in two years. Not because you don't want to. Because you cannot afford to. Because the EMIs will eat you.

5 You have a "one day" list.

"One day I will start my own thing." "One day I will quit." "One day I will write that book." "One day I will travel." That "one day" never comes. Because the cage has no door.

The Story of the Goldfish

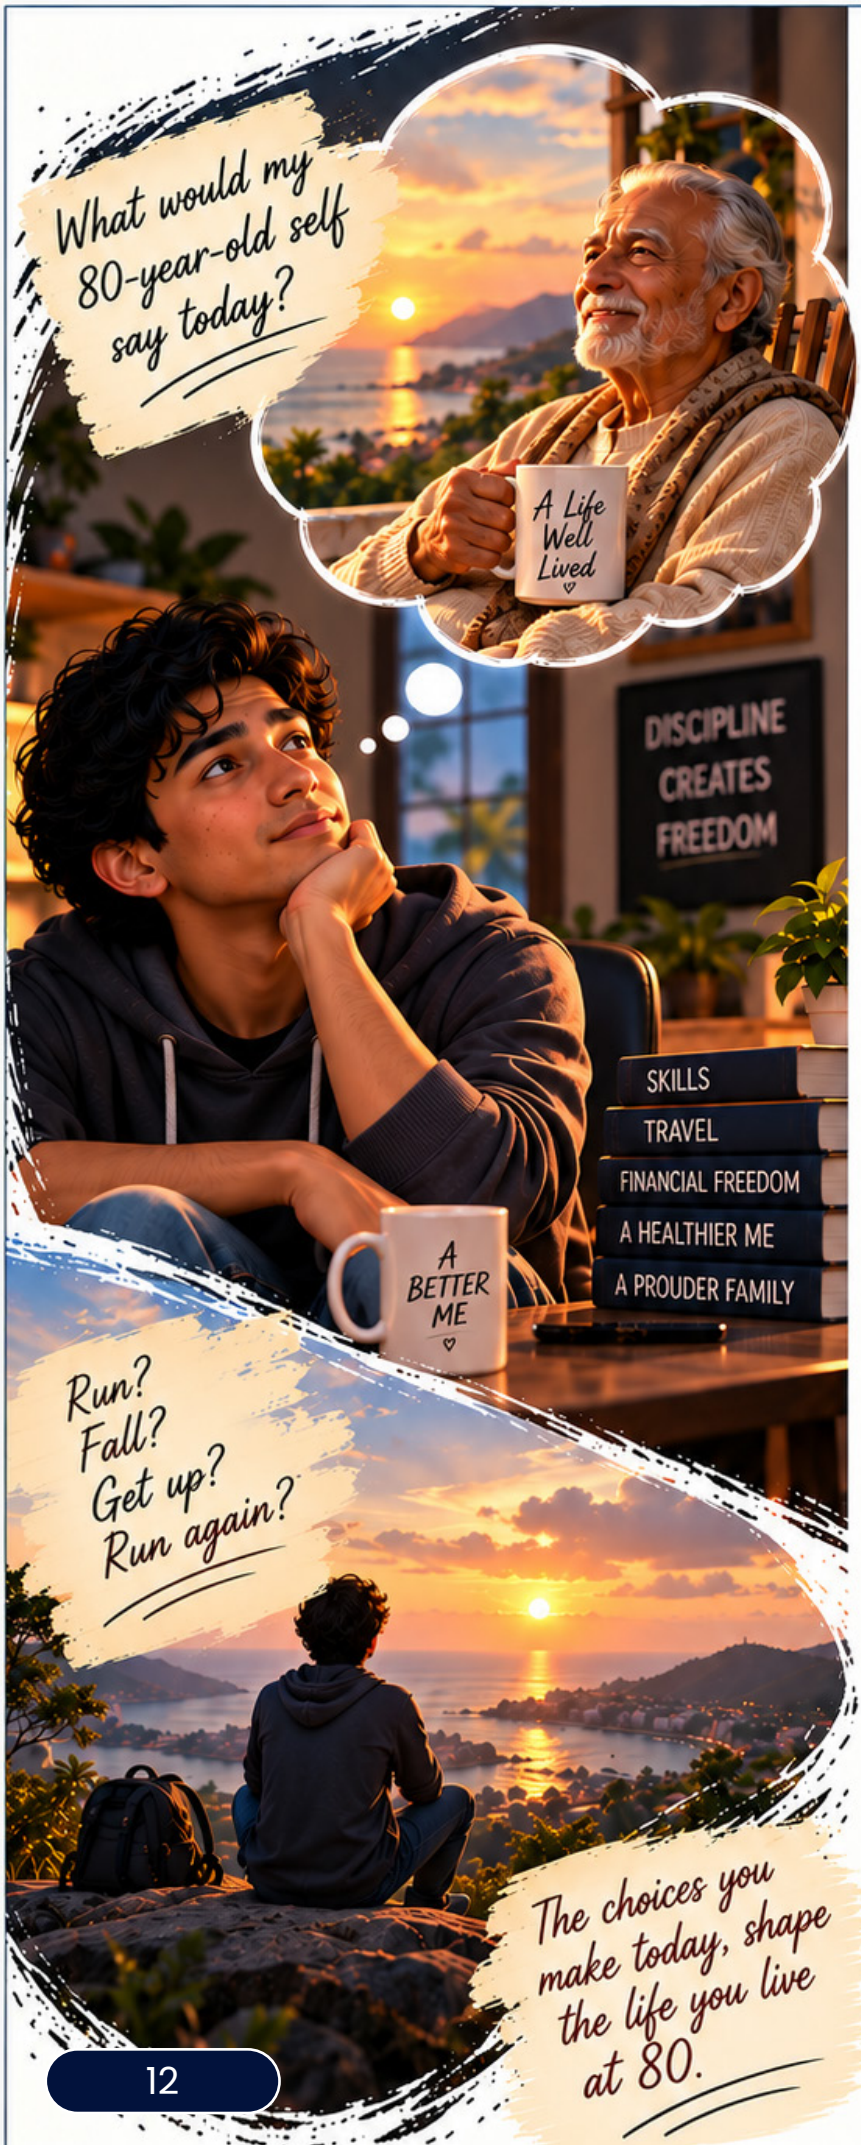
The speaker told a story.

“A goldfish lives in a bowl. The bowl is small. The water is clean. The food comes every morning. The goldfish thinks: ‘This is life. This is good.’”

“One day, the goldfish is moved to a lake. The lake is vast. The water is deep. The goldfish looks around and says: ‘This is too big. I am scared. Take me back to my bowl.’”

“The goldfish chooses the bowl. Because the bowl is safe. The bowl is known. The bowl is small.”

Do not be the goldfish.
Do not choose the bowl.



The Voice of Your 80-Year-Old Self

The speaker asked the students to close their eyes again.

"Imagine you are 80 years old. Your hair is white. Your hands are slow. You are sitting on a porch somewhere. Maybe in Pune. Maybe in Goa. Maybe in your childhood home.

"Now ask yourself: What does my 80-year-old self wish I had done at 22?"

He let the silence stretch.

"Does your 80-year-old self wish you had taken that safe job? Does he wish you had stayed on the wall? Does he wish you had never fallen?"

"Or does he wish you had run? Fallen? Gotten up? Run again? Hunted? Lost? Cried? Won?"

A girl in the third row was crying. She did not know why.

"Your 80-year-old self is screaming the answer right now," the speaker said. "Can you hear him?"

The life you want at 80 is built by the choices you make today at 22.

The 100-Year Name Test

The speaker gave the students a challenge.

“Write your name on a piece of paper.
Write it 100 times.”

“Now imagine: 100 years from today,
who will write your name?”

“Will your grandchildren know your name?
Will the world know your name? Will the work you did outlive you?”

“If the answer is no, then what will you change?”

Arjun took this test. He wrote his name.
Arjun Sharma. Arjun Sharma. Arjun Sharma.

He wrote it 100 times.

Then he thought about his grandfather.
He did not know his grandfather’s name.
He had to call his father to ask.

His grandfather had worked for 40 years.
He had a pension. He had a watch.
He was forgotten.

Arjun did not want to be forgotten.

Live in a way that your name still matters 100 years from today.

The Two Paths

The speaker drew two paths on the whiteboard.

Path One: The Cat's Path

College → Placement → Salary → EMI → Lifestyle → More Salary → More EMI → More Lifestyle → Retirement → Watch → Forgotten.

Path Two: The Lion's Path

College → Hunger → Skill → Small start → Failure → Learning → Small success → Scale → Team → Systems → Freedom → Legacy → Remembered.

"Which path are you on?" the speaker asked.

Priya was on Path One. She did not even know Path Two existed.

Rohan was on Path Two. He was hungry. He was building.

The choice you make today decides the story they will tell tomorrow.

The First Step

The speaker said: “The first step is the hardest. Because the first step requires you to say no.

“No to the placement. No to the salary. No to the safe path.

“No to your parents’ fear. No to your friends’ opinions. No to your own doubt.”

“Say no to the bowl. Say yes to the hunt.”

He paused.

“Rohan said no. Priya said yes.

“Look at their lives now. Look at their eyes. Look at their freedom.”

“Who would you rather be?”

The 30-Day Challenge

The speaker gave the students a challenge.

"For the next 30 days, do not accept any money from a salary. Find another way. Any way."

"Sell something on Instagram. Tutor a neighbor's kid. Walk dogs. Make candles. Write content. Do freelance work. Anything."

"See how it feels to feed yourself. See how it feels to hunt."

"At the end of 30 days, decide. Do you want the bowl or the jungle?"

No one in the auditorium took the challenge that night.

But some of them thought about it.
Some of them tried it.
Some of them never went back.

Thirty days can change the direction of your life.

The Story of the Eagle and the Chicken

The speaker told one more story.

"There was an eagle's egg. It fell from the nest. A farmer found it and put it under a chicken.

The egg hatched. The baby eagle grew up with the chickens. It scratched the ground. It ate grain. It clucked. It thought it was a chicken.

"One day, an eagle flew overhead. The baby eagle looked up. The other chickens said: 'Don't look up. That's not for us. We are chickens."

"The baby eagle looked down. It scratched the ground. It ate grain. It lived and died as a chicken.

"But it was an eagle. It was born to fly."

"You are an eagle," the speaker said. "Stop living like a chicken."

You were born to fly.
Don't let the world
keep you on the ground.

The Seven Lies You Have Been Told

The speaker listed seven lies. He said: "You have heard these all your life. They are lies. Every single one."

Lie One: "Get a safe job."

There is no safe job. Companies fire people every day. Economies crash every decade. The only safety is your own skill.

Lie Two: "Study hard, get good grades, get a good job."

Grades open doors. They do not build rooms. A good job is still a job. You are still working for someone else.

Lie Three: "MBA is the path to success."

MBA is the path to being a good employee. Not a good employer.

Lie Four: "You need money to make money."

You need a skill and a phone. That is all.

Lie Five: "Start after you have experience."

You get experience by starting. Not before.

Lie Six: "What will people say?"

People will say something no matter what you do. Let them say. You build.

Lie Seven: "One day."

One day never comes. Today comes. Today is the only day.

Stop believing the lies.
Start building your truth.

The Truth About Your Parents

The speaker's voice softened.

"Your parents are not the enemy. They love you. They sacrificed for you. They want you to be safe because they never were.

"But their fear is not your command. Their path is not your path.

"They walked in a different world. A world without internet. A world without UPI. A world without 750 million smartphone users.

"You are walking in a new world. A world where a 22-year-old with a phone can reach crores of people.

"Do not disrespect your parents by copying them. Respect them by exceeding them."

They gave you life.
You give them a life
they are proud of.

The Letter Arjun Wrote That Night

After the speech, Arjun went back to his hostel room.
He could not sleep.

He took out his notebook. He wrote a letter to himself.

Dear Arjun,

Tonight, I saw my future. It was a cubicle.
It was a salary. It was EMIs. It was a watch at retirement. It was being forgotten.

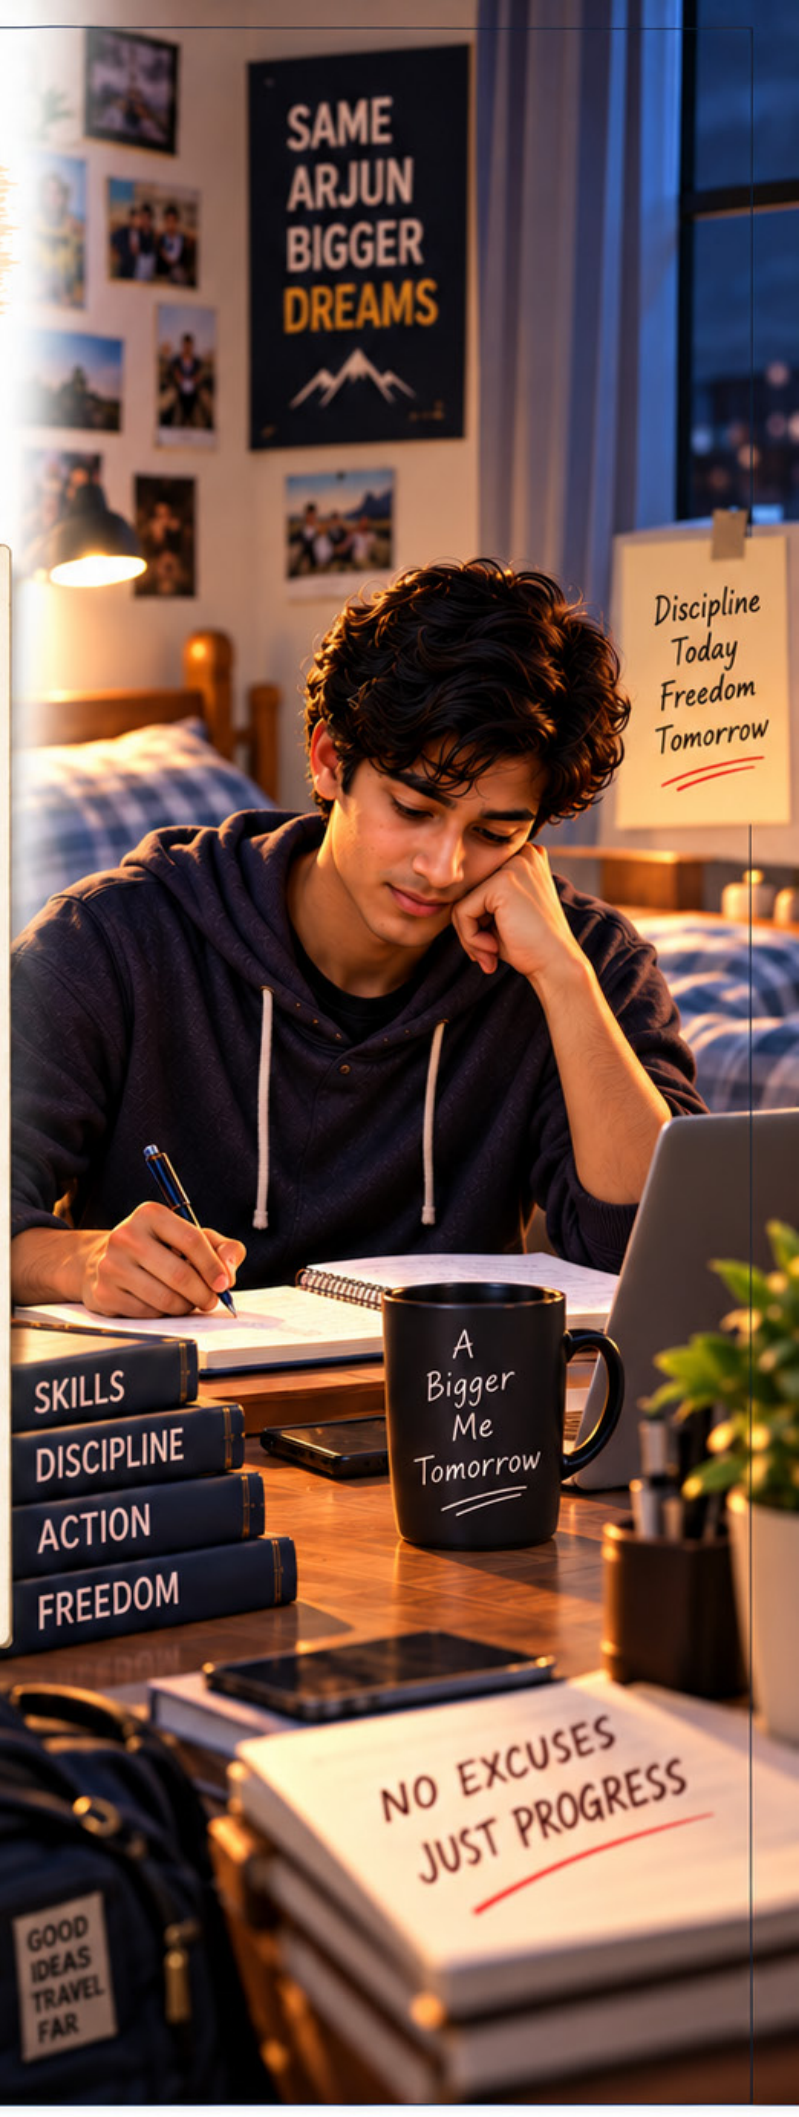
I don't want that future.
I don't know what I want. But I know what
I don't want.

I don't want to be a cat.
I don't want to chase rats.
I want to hunt.
I want to build.
I want to be remembered.

Tomorrow, I will make a decision.
Tomorrow, I will say no.

I am scared. But I am more scared of regret.

Love,
Arjun (the lion in training)



He slept at 3 AM.
He woke up at 7 AM.
He made a phone call.

Some letters change lives.

The Phone Call

"Hello, TCS placement cell? This is Arjun Sharma. I am withdrawing from the placement process."

Silence.

"Are you sure?" the placement officer asked.

"I have never been more sure of anything in my life."

"Your parents know?"

"Not yet. But they will. And they will understand. Or they won't. Either way, I am doing this."

"You are making a mistake."

"Maybe. But it is my mistake to make."

Arjun hung up. His hands were shaking. His heart was pounding. He felt like he had jumped off a cliff.

He had.

But sometimes, you have to jump to learn how to fly.

Courage is not the absence of fear, but the decision that something else is more important.

Chapter One Summary

Truth	Lie
Salary is an addiction	Salary is security
Employers own your time	You are independent
Job money shrinks you	Job money grows you
The first bite is the trap	The first bite is freedom

The Five Signs You Are Trapped:

1. You check your bank balance before your dreams
2. You create nothing, you only consume
3. Your expenses grow faster than your income
4. You cannot take a break
5. You have a "one day" list that never shrinks

Your Decision Today:

Will your first money come from a job or from your own creation?

Chapter One: Practical Exercises

Reflection today. A better tomorrow.

1 Exercise 1: The 6-Month Test

Ask yourself: If my salary stopped today, would I panic or would I pivot?
Write your answer here:

2 Exercise 2: The 100-Year Name Test

Write your name 10 times. Then ask: Who will write this name 100 years from now?

3 Exercise 3: The 30-Day Challenge

For 30 days, find one way to make money without a salary.
Write your plan:

4 Exercise 4: The Letter to Your 80-Year-Old Self

Write a letter from your 80-year-old self to your current self.
What does he/she say?

Chapter One: Quotes to Remember

Write these down. Paste them on your wall. Read them every morning.

> "The first money that you are tasting is going to be very, very, very special."

> "Once you have experienced first earning your salary, it can be, very, very difficult to break away from that dependence."

> "Smoking is addiction. Drinking is addiction. Getting a monthly salary is the biggest addiction."

> "The first money decides your direction. If it comes from a job, you become a cat. If it comes from your own creation, you become a lion."

Chapter One: The Lion's Roar

Stand up. Take a deep breath. Say this out loud:

> I am not a cat. I am not a rat. I am a lion in training. The first bite will not trap me. I will hunt for myself.

Now turn the page. The hunt continues.

CHAPTER TWO

The Cat and the Lion: Why Your Job Is Training You to Be Small

The Cat and the Lion

"In your job, we only make you do a cat chasing a rat."

The speaker walked to the edge of the stage.

He said: "Let me tell you a story. A story about two desks. Two colleagues. Two lives."

The auditorium leaned forward.

Bigger Thinking Brighter You

The Story of Two Colleagues

In Bengaluru, in a glass building on Outer Ring Road, there were two desks.

At Desk Number 47 sat Arjun.

Arjun was 24. He worked at a top edtech company. His job was to close leads. His KPI was 40 calls per day. His reward for good work was "Employee of the Month" – a ₹500 Amazon voucher.

Arjun had been doing this for 18 months. He could close a lead in 90 seconds. He could convince a stranger to buy a course they did not need. He was very, very good at his job.

But Arjun could not close a deal for himself. He could not build an audience. He could not sell his own product. He could not even start a small side hustle because he was "too tired after work."

Arjun was a championship-level rat-chaser.

Desk Number 12

At Desk Number 12 sat Neha.

Neha was also 24. She had the same job. The same KPI. The same Amazon vouchers. The same tired eyes.

But Neha had a secret.

Every night, after her 40 calls, she went home and recorded YouTube videos. She taught data analytics in Hindi. She spoke to the camera like she was teaching her little brother.

For six months, no one watched. For six months, she talked to an empty room. For six months, she went to bed at 2 AM and woke up at 7 AM.

Then one video went viral. 2 lakh views. Then 5 lakh. Then 10 lakh.

Neha quit her job. She now has 3 lakh subscribers. She sells her own course. She makes ₹8 lakh per month.

She still works 10 hours a day. But now, she hunts deer. Her deer are building systems, creating content, serving her audience.

Arjun still sits at Desk Number 47. He still chases rats. He still gets ₹500 Amazon vouchers.

Arjun is a cat. Neha is a lion.

What Did Neha Do That Arjun Didn't?

The speaker asked the audience: "What was the difference?"

Students shouted answers.

"She worked harder." "She was smarter." "She got lucky."

The speaker shook his head.

"No. The difference is this: Neha understood that her job would never teach her to be free. Arjun thought his job was the destination. Neha knew it was just a bus stop."

Neha used her job for money. She did not let her job use her for time.

Arjun gave his time to his job. He got money. He thought that was a fair trade. It was not. Because time is the only thing you cannot buy back.

Time is Irreplaceable

The Employer's Secret

The old storytellers say: A zoo owner does not teach his tigers to hunt deer. If the tigers learned to hunt deer, they would leave the zoo. So the zoo owner teaches the tigers to chase mice. Mice are small, Mice are safe. Mice keep the tiger busy but never full.

The tiger thinks it is hunting. The zoo owner knows it is playing.

Your employer is the zoo owner. You are the tiger.

Do not be angry at the employer. The employer is doing what is logical. Why would they train you to leave? Why would they teach you to become their competitor?

They won't. They will train you to be useful to them. Not powerful for yourself.

Arjun's company taught him to close leads for them. They did not teach him to build a business for himself. Why would they?

Neha taught herself.

Learn Build Be Free

The Three Animals

The speaker drew three animals on the whiteboard.

The Cat: Sits in an office. Has a salary. Has a designation. Has a safe, cozy, lazy life. Never starves. Never runs. Safe. Forgotten.

The Fox: Works alone as a freelancer, YouTuber (or) consultant. Eats some days, fasts others. Not safe. Not caged.

The Lion: Builds a pride. Gives jobs. Creates systems. Does not put money in its own pocket; others put money in the lion's pocket. Royal. Remembered.

"Which animal are you feeding?" the speaker asked.

"It's not about what you become, but what you feed every day."

The Three Zones (India Edition)

Zone	Animal	Real India Example	Monthly Income Range	Freedom Score
Employment	Cat	TCS, Infosys, WITCH companies, bank PO, government clerk	₹25k - ₹1.5L	2/10
Self-Employed	Fox	Freelancer, YouTuber, Zomato partner, tutor, influencer	₹0 - ₹5L	6/10
Entrepreneurship	Lion	Founder (Zomato, Ola, your local chaiwala, factory owner)	₹0 - ₹∞	9/10

The speaker pointed to the chart.

“Most of you are aiming for the first zone. You think it is safe. It is not safe. It is a cage with a nice view.”

“The second zone is hungry. The third zone is royal.”

“Do not aim for the cage. Aim for the throne.”

Don’t aim for the cage.
Aim for the throne.

The Cat Who Thought He Was a Lion

"You think becoming a cat, I have done something to qualify to become a lion. And then you jump into the space of an entrepreneur."

This happens every day.

A marketing manager works for 10 years. Then quits to start an agency. And fails.

Why? Because they spent 10 years being a cat. They know how to follow briefs. They don't know how to find clients. They know how to manage budgets. They don't know how to make payroll.

The cat cannot become a lion by changing its name. The cat can only become a lion by changing its nature.

And nature takes time. Nature takes hunger. Nature takes fire.

Arjun thought his gold medal made him a lion. It did not. It made him a very qualified cat.

A new nature takes time, hunger, and fire.

The Blinking Cat on the Wall

"After starting a startup company, they stand up on the wall and blink as a cat on the wall."

A cat climbs onto a wall. It looks down at the world. It blinks. It is safe. It will not fall.

But it will also never run.

That is the "side hustle" founder. The one who keeps their job and starts a "startup" on weekends. They do both poorly. They never commit. They never succeed.

They are on the wall. Blinking. Safe. Small.

Arjun had been talking about starting a "side hustle" for two years. He had a Canva logo. He had an Instagram page with 200 followers. He had not made a single sale.

He was on the wall. Blinking.

Gen-Z Translation:
You cannot build a lion's body with cat's hours.

The Story of the Side Hustle That Never Happened

The speaker told a story.

"There was a man named Raj. He worked at a bank. Every evening, he came home and said: 'One day, I will start my own business."

"He bought a domain name. He designed a logo. He told his friends about his 'startup."

"Five years passed. The domain expired. The logo was forgotten. The friends stopped asking."

Raj still works at the bank. He still says: 'One day."

"Do not be Raj. Do not buy a domain. Build something. Do not design a logo. Make a sale. Do not tell your friends. Show them your revenue."

Ideas are easy.
Execution changes lives.

The Safe, Cozy, Lazy Job

"The safe, cozy, lazy job is only for lazy fellows."

This is harsh. But read it again.

The speaker is not against rest. He is against rest that comes from fear.

A lion rests because it has eaten. A lion rests because the hunt is over. A lion rests on its own terms.

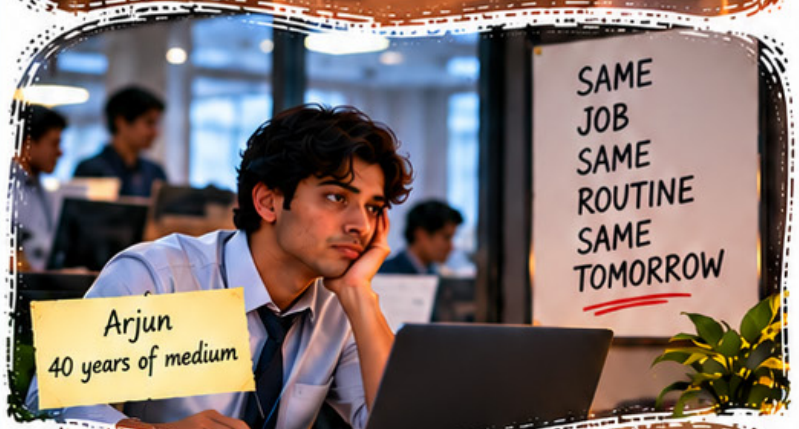
A cat rests because it is tired. Tired from chasing someone else's rats. Tired from running on someone else's wheel. Tired from a race it never wanted to enter.

Which rest do you want?

Arjun wanted rest at 24. He got it. He was resting in his cubicle, scrolling Instagram, waiting for 7 PM.

Neha wanted rest at 34. She was working at 24 so she could rest later.

Rest with purpose comes only after effort. Not from fear, not from laziness.



The Contradiction That Is Not a Contradiction

"If you want to be super lazy, super cozy, become an entrepreneur. I might sound contradicting and conflicting."

Here is the explanation.

The entrepreneur works brutally for 5-10 years. Then builds systems. Then hires a team. Then delegates everything.

Then, and only then, the entrepreneur rests. And the entrepreneur rests more deeply than any employee ever could.

The employee works moderately for 40 years. Then retires. Then rests. But by then, the body is tired. The spirit is tired. The rest is not sweet. It is empty.

Neha chose 5 years of hard work. Arjun chose 40 years of moderate effort.

Choose your hard. Choose your rest.

Years 1-5	Years 5-10	Years 10+
Work like a dog	Build systems	Work less than any employee
No weekends	Hire team	Delegate everything
Maggi and anxiety	Some stability	Royal lazy

The discomfort you feel today is the comfort you will enjoy tomorrow.

The Tamil Wisdom

The speaker shared a saying (paraphrased from Tamil):

"To sit like a king, you must first run like a madman."

You see the Rolls Royce. You see the Benz. You see the big house in the hills. You think the owner is lucky. You think the owner was born rich.

No.

You are seeing the result. You are not seeing the 100-hour weeks. You are not seeing the failed businesses. You are not seeing the nights spent crying in the bathroom so the family wouldn't hear.

His work is smart work now. But his work was hard work first.

Vikram, the rich kid in the auditorium, saw this every day. His father had built a factory from nothing. His father had slept on the factory floor for three years. His father had been called a fool by his own relatives.

Now Vikram drove a BMW. But Vikram had never worked a single hard day in his life. And deep down, Vikram knew: he was not a lion. He was a cat wearing lion's clothes.

To sit like a king,
you must first run like a madman.

The Rat Audit

The speaker gave the students an exercise.

"Identify one 'rat' you are currently chasing. Be specific."

He wrote an example on the board:

The Rat

	Who Set This Rat For You?	When Will you Stop?
Getting 9+ CGPA	College placement cell	End of this semester

He asked the students to fill their own.

Arjun wrote: "Getting a promotion at my edtech job. My manager set this rat. I will stop when I realize the promotion is just a bigger rat."

Neha, in her seat, wrote nothing. She had already stopped chasing rats. She was hunting deer.

Don't chase rats. Hunt a bigger life.

The Story of the Rat Race

The speaker told a story.

“There is a famous experiment. Scientists put rats in a cage with a wheel. The rats run on the wheel. They run fast. They run hard. They run until they are tired.

“But the wheel goes nowhere. The rats stay in the same cage. The rats never ask: ‘Where am I going?’”

“The corporate world is a wheel. You run. You get promoted. You run faster. You get more money. You run even faster. But you stay in the same cage.”

“The only way out is to stop running on the wheel. Get off the wheel. Build your own cage. Then break the cage. Then run in the jungle.”

Stop running in circles.
Create your own path.

The Five Questions to Ask Before Every Job

The speaker said: “Before you accept any job, ask these five questions. If you cannot answer them honestly, do not take the job.”

Question One:

“Will this job teach me something I cannot teach myself?”

Question Two:

“Will this job give me time to build my own thing?”

Question Three:

“Will this job make me dependent or independent?”

Question Four:

“Can I leave this job tomorrow without my life falling apart?”

Question Five:

“Will I be proud of this job when I am 80?”

Arjun could not answer any of these questions honestly. He took the job anyway. He regretted it.

Neha answered all five. She took the job. She used it. She left it.

The right job is a stepping stone. Not a lifetime prison.

The Difference Between a Job and a Mission

The speaker drew two columns.

Job	Mission
You work for someone else	You work for yourself
You have a boss	You have a customer
You get a salary	You create value
You are replaceable	You are irreplaceable
You count hours	You count impact
You retire	You never retire (you delegate)

"A job is what you do for money.
A mission is what you do for life."

"Do not confuse the two."

Arjun had a job. Neha had a mission. That was the difference.

A job pays your bills.
A mission gives your life meaning.

The Story of the Carpenter

The speaker told one more story.

There was a carpenter. He was very good. He built beautiful furniture. He worked for a rich man.

One day, the rich man said: ‘Build me a house. Use the best materials. Make it beautiful.’

The carpenter was tired. He was old. He wanted to retire. He used cheap materials. He cut corners. He built a poor house.

When he finished, the rich man said: ‘This house is for you. Thank you for your service.’

The carpenter was shocked. He had built a poor house for himself.

You are building your own house every day. With every hour you work. With every task you complete. With every skill you learn or ignore.

Do not build a poor house.

The quality of your work today builds the house you live in tomorrow.

The Truth About Your Manager

The speaker's voice became quieter.

Your manager is not your enemy.
Your manager is also a cat.
A slightly bigger cat. But still a cat.

Your manager has a boss.
That boss has a boss.
That boss has a board.
The board has shareholders.

Everyone is chasing a rat.
No one is hunting a deer.

Do not take advice from your manager about your future.
Your manager does not know your future.
Your manager knows how to keep you in your seat.

The only person who knows your future is you.

Do not let someone else's map decide your destination.

The Story of the Promotion

The speaker asked: “How many of you want a promotion?”

Half the hands went up.

“Why?” he asked.

“More money,” someone said.
“More respect,” someone else said.

The speaker nodded. Then he said:
“Let me tell you the truth about promotions.”

A promotion is not a reward.
A promotion is a bigger cage.
Your responsibilities grow. Your hours grow. Your stress grows. Your salary grows a little. Your freedom shrinks a lot.

The only promotion that matters is the one you give yourself. The day you promote yourself from employee to owner. From cat to lion.

That promotion has no limit.
That promotion has no boss.
That promotion is permanent.

Do not wait for a promotion.
Create a life where promotion does not matter.

Chapter Two Summary

The Test:

Question	Cat Answer	Lion Answer
Do you wait for permission?	Yes	No
Do you need monthly approval?	Yes	No
Can you feed yourself?	No	Yes
Do you own your time?	No	Yes

The Three Animals:

Animal	Income	Lifestyle	Freedom
Cat	Monthly salary from one master	Safe, cozy, lazy	2/10
Fox	Fees from many clients	Feast or famine, solo	6/10
Lion	Passive systems and teams	Royal, majestic, gives jobs	9/10

Your Decision Today:

Stop feeding the cat inside you.
Start feeding the lion.

Chapter Two: Practical Exercises

Exercise 1: The Rat Audit

Identify one "rat" you are currently chasing. Be specific.

The Rat	Who Set This Rat For You?	When Will You Stop?

Exercise 2: The Five Questions

Answer these for your current or future job:

• Will this job teach me something I cannot teach myself?	_____
• Will this job give me time to build my own thing?	_____
• Will this job make me dependent or independent?	_____
• Can I leave this job tomorrow without my life falling apart?	_____
• Will I be proud of this job when I am 80?	_____

Exercise 3: The Promotion Test

Do you want a promotion from your job or a promotion to your own life?

Chapter Two: Quotes to Remember

Write these down. Paste them on your wall. Read them every morning.

> "In your job, we only make you do a cat chasing a rat."

> "Muhammad as an employer, he is not going to give you the skills to become a lion chasing a deer. He will only make you a cat chasing a rat."

> "You feed the cat. The cat can still only chase the rat. It cannot become a lion."

> "You cannot become a lion by acting like a cat. The training is different. The hunger is different. The road is different."

Chapter Two: The Lion's Roar

Stand up. Take a deep breath. Say this out loud:

> "I am not a cat. I am not a rat. I am a lion.
> I will not chase someone else's rats.
> I will hunt my own deer.
> I will build my own pride. I will own my own time."

Now turn the page. The hunt continues.

The Bridge to Chapter Three

Arjun sat in his cubicle. He looked at Desk Number 12. It was empty. Neha had left three months ago.

He checked her Instagram. 5 lakh followers. Her course was selling. She was in Goa, working from a café with her laptop open and a smile on her face.

Arjun looked at his own screen. 40 calls to make. A ₹500 Amazon voucher waiting for him at the end of the month.

He closed his laptop. He opened his notebook. He wrote:

> "I want to be remembered. Not replaced."

He did not know how. But he had taken the first step. He had admitted the truth.

He was a cat. He wanted to be a lion.

The next chapter would teach him how.

CHAPTER THREE

The 100 Forgotten Princes:

Why History Erases Employees

The 100 Forgotten Princes

"How many of you know them by name? One? Two? Nobody knows the other 98 names."

The speaker walked to the center of the stage. He sat on the edge. He spoke like a grandfather telling a bedtime story.

"Let me tell you the oldest story in India."

The Story of the Kingdom

Long, long ago, there was a kingdom. In that kingdom, there were 100 princes. They were called the Kauravas. They had wealth. They had armies. They had palaces. They had everything.

And there were 5 princes. They were called the Pandavas. They had nothing. They were exiled. They lived in forests. They ate roots and berries.

Today, every child in India knows the names of the 5 Pandavas. Yudhishthira. Bhima. Arjuna. Nakula. Sahadeva.

And the 100 Kauravas? Name three. Just three. Duryodhana. Dushasana. Maybe Vikarna. The other 97? Forgotten. Erased. As if they never lived.

"The Kauravas had everything," the speaker said. "The Pandavas had nothing. But history remembers the Pandavas. Why?"

He paused.

"Because the Pandavas built. The Kauravas only ruled. The Pandavas created. The Kauravas only consumed. The Pandavas fought for something. The Kauravas only protected what they had.

> "Do you want to be a Kaurava or a Pandava?"

The 3,00,000 Forgotten Employees

The speaker pointed to the whiteboard.
He wrote: INFOSYS.

“Today, there is a company called Infosys.
It has 3,00,000 employees. Name five.
You cannot.”

He wrote: NARAYANA MURTHY.
NANDAN NILEKANI.

“But name the founders. Narayana Murthy.
Nandan Nilekani. You know them.

“The founders are remembered.
The employees are replaced.

“Do you want to be a founder or an employee? Do you want to be remembered or replaced?”

The auditorium was silent.

> “Do you want to be remembered or replaced?”

The 5 Pandavas of Today's India

The speaker wrote five names on the board.

Founder	Their Weapon	What They Built	Starting Condition
Deepinder Goyal	Product sense	Zomato	A PDF of restaurant menus
Ritesh Agarwal	Hustle + fundraising	OYO	A travel blog from a college hostel
Falguni Nayar	Market understanding	Nykaa	Started at age 50, not 22
Vijay Shekhar Sharma	Timing	Paytm	Borrowed money from mother
Bhavish Aggarwal	Ambition	Ola	One car and a website

"Notice," the speaker said. "None of them 'got placement.' They created placement.

"None of them waited for permission. They gave themselves permission.

"None of them asked for a job. They created jobs.

"None of them chased rats. They hunted deer."

> "None of them chased rats. They hunted deer."

The Modern Kaurava Test

The speaker asked the students to take out a piece of paper.

"Answer these three questions. Be honest. No one will see your answers."

1 One: If you stopped working tomorrow, would anyone notice? Not your manager. Not your team. Would the world notice?

2 Two: Do customers know your name? Not your boss. Not your colleagues. Do the people who pay money know who you are?

3 Three: Could you leave your job today and take your value with you? Or does your value live inside your company's building?

"If you answered no to any of these," the speaker said, "you are a Kaurava. You are one of the 98 forgotten princes."

"But here is the good news: You can still become a Pandava. Today."

> "You can still become a Pandava. Today."

The Story of the Two Engineers

The speaker told a story.

"There were two engineers. Same college. Same batch. Same grades.

"One joined Infosys. He worked hard. He got promoted. He bought a house. He bought a car. He got married. He had children. He retired. He got a watch. He was forgotten.

"The other started a small software company. He worked from his bedroom. He failed three times. He almost gave up. Then he got one client. Then ten. Then a hundred. Then he sold the company for 100 crores. He retired at 45. He is remembered.

Same intelligence. Same skills. Same starting point. Different choices.

One chose the cage. One chose the jungle.

"Which one will you be?"

> "Which one will you be?"

The 100-Year Name Test

The speaker gave the students a challenge.

"Write your name on a piece of paper.
Write it 100 times.

"Now imagine: 100 years from today,
who will write your name?"

"Will your grandchildren know your name?
Will the world know your name?
Will the work you did outlive you?"

"If the answer is no, then what will you change?"

Arjun took this test. He wrote his name.
Arjun Sharma. Arjun Sharma. Arjun Sharma.

He wrote it 100 times.

Then he thought about his grandfather.
He did not know his grandfather's name.
He had to call his father to ask.

His grandfather had worked for 40 years.
He had a pension. He had a watch.
He was forgotten.

Arjun did not want to be forgotten.

> "Will the work you did outlive you?"

Find Your Weapon

"Arjuna has got one weapon. He knows what is his tool. Bhima knows what is his tool."

Arjuna had the Gandiva (the bow).
Bhima had the Gada (the mace).
Nakula had the sword.
Sahadeva had wisdom.
Yudhishthira had truth.

Every Pandava had ONE thing they mastered.

"What is your one thing?" the speaker asked.
"What is your Gandiva?"

Is it coding? Writing? Selling? Teaching? Designing? Cooking? Speaking? Dancing? Photography? Makeup? Fitness?

Coding · Writing · Selling · Teaching
Designing · Cooking · Speaking · Dancing
Photography · Makeup · Fitness

"Find it. Sharpen it. Declare it."

The Story of the Chef

The speaker told a story.

“There was a chef. He worked at a five-star hotel. He was very good. His food was famous. But his name was not on the menu. The hotel’s name was on the menu.

“One day, he quit. He started a small food stall. He put his name on the board. ‘Chef Raj’s Kitchen.’

“People came because they remembered his food from the hotel. They told their friends about ‘Chef Raj.’ Not about the hotel.

“Today, Chef Raj has five restaurants. His name is on every menu. He is remembered.

The hotel replaced him the next day. He was not remembered there.

“Your employer will replace you. Build something where you cannot be replaced.”

> “Build something where you cannot be replaced.”

Declare Your Arjuna

"If you have your Gandiva, declare your Arjuna. Show your talent and prove it to the world."

The speaker was shouting now.

"Stop hiding your talent. Stop waiting for permission to be great. Stop saying 'I'll start when I'm ready."

"If you are a coder, code. If you are a writer, write. If you are a seller, sell. If you are a teacher, teach. If you are a makeup artist, post your work. If you are a fitness trainer, start with one client."

"Declare it. Today. Out loud.

"Say it: 'I am a [your skill]. And I am going to build something with it."

Neha had declared herself a teacher.
She had 3 lakh students now.

Rohan had declared himself a food creator.
He had 2 lakh followers and a cloud kitchen.

What will you declare?

> "What will you declare?"

The Five Pandavas Within You

The speaker said: "You do not need to be just one Pandava. You can be all five."

Arjuna:
Your unique skill. Your weapon. The thing only you can do.

Bhima:
Your strength. Your ability to work hard. To endure. To not give up.

Nakula:
Your diplomacy. Your ability to talk to people. To sell. To convince.

Sahadeva:
Your wisdom. Your ability to learn from failure. To adapt. To grow.

Yudhishthira:
Your integrity. Your truth. Your reason for building.

"Build all five. Become unforgettable."

The Story of the Three Friends (Continued)

Remember the three friends from Punjab?

The first took a government job. He was forgotten.

The second went to America for an MBA. He was rich but empty.

The third stayed in his village. He made pickles from his mother's recipe. He sold them on Instagram. He shipped them in plastic jars.

The first year, he made ₹40,000. Total. His friends laughed.

The second year, he made ₹2 lakhs. The third year, ₹10 lakhs.

By the fifth year, he had 50 employees. All from his village. All from families that had never seen a salary.

Today, when he walks down that village street, old women touch his feet. Not because he is rich. Because he gave their sons jobs.

His name will be remembered for a hundred years.

"He found his weapon," the speaker said. "Pickles. A simple thing. But he built a kingdom from it.

"What is your pickle?"

The Difference Between a Name and a Number

The speaker drew two columns.

Number	Name
Employee ID 4729	Rohan, the food creator
Salary: ₹35,000/month	Revenue: ₹1 lakh/month
Works for TCS	Works for himself
Replaced in 2 weeks	Irreplaceable
Forgotten in 10 years	Remembered for generations

> "Every employee is a number. Every entrepreneur is a name. Do you want to be a number or a name?"

The Story of the Call Center

The speaker told a story.

"There was a call center. 500 employees. Every day, they answered calls. 'Hello, this is David.' 'Hello, this is Jennifer.' Fake names. Fake accents. Fake lives.

One day, one of them quit. She started her own business. Her real name. Her real accent. Her real self.

She failed twice. Then she succeeded.

Today, her name is known. The call center still has 500 employees. Still using fake names.

> "Do not live under a fake name. Do not live a fake life. Declare yourself."

The Question That Changes Everything

The speaker asked one question. He asked it slowly. He asked it like it was the most important question in the world.

“Do you want to have identity?”

The auditorium was silent.

“Because if you take a job, you are signing up to be Kaurava #47. You will get a salary. You will get a designation. But at the retirement party, your name will be forgotten by Friday.”

The Pandavas — just five — are remembered forever. Not because they were born better. Because they chose the hard road. Because Arjuna knew his weapon. Because Bhima showed his strength.

> “Do you know your weapon?
> Will you show your strength?”

Chapter Three Summary

	Kaurava	Pandava
Number	100	5
Remembered?	No	Yes
Identity	None	Eternal
Focus	Getting a job	Building something
Exit	Forgotten	Legend

The Modern Kaurava Test:

- If you stopped working tomorrow, would anyone notice?
- Do customers know your name?
- Could you leave your job and take your value with you?

If you answered no to any of these, you are a Kaurava.

But you can still become a Pandava. Today.

Chapter Three: Practical Exercises

1 The 100-Year Name Test

Write your name 10 times. Then ask: Who will write this name 100 years from now?

1. _____
2. _____
3. _____
4. _____
5. _____
6. _____
7. _____
8. _____
9. _____
10. _____

2 Find Your Weapon

What is the one skill that only you have?
What is your Gandiva?

3 Declare Your Arjuna

Write a declaration: "I am a [your skill].
And I am going to build something with it."

4 The Five Pandavas Audit

Rate yourself on each (1-10):

Pandava Quality	Description	Your Score (1-10)
Arjuna	Unique skill
Bhima	Strength/endurance
Nakula	Diplomacy/sales
Sahadeva	Wisdom/learning
Yudhishthira	Integrity/truth

Which one do you need to develop most? _____

Chapter Three: Quotes to Remember

Write these down. Paste them on your wall. Read them every morning.

> "How many of you know them by name?
> One? Two? Nobody knows the other 98 names."

> "Thousands of people are working in various organizations > whose name is known only the CEOs, the MDs.
> You become a non-entity."

> "Do you want to have identity?"

> "Being employed is being anonymous.
> Being an entrepreneur is being remembered.
> Choose your immortality."

Chapter Three: The Lion's Roar

Stand up. Take a deep breath. Say this out loud:

"I am not a number.
I am not a Kaurava. I am a Pandava.
I have a weapon. I have a name.
I will be remembered. Not replaced."

Now turn the page. The hunt continues.

Arjun sat in his cubicle. He had taken the Modern Kaurava Test.

Question One: If you stopped working tomorrow, would anyone notice?
His manager would notice. Because his 40 calls needed to be done. But the world? No.

Question Two: Do customers know your name?
His customers knew his company's name. Not his.

Question Three: Could you leave your job and take your value with you?
No. His value was in the company's system. Not in him.

Arjun was a Kaurava. He was number 47.

He closed his laptop. He opened his notebook. He wrote:

"I want to be a Pandava. I need to find my weapon."

He did not know what his weapon was. But he had taken the first step.
He had admitted he needed one.

The Bridge to Chapter Four

Neha had found her weapon. Teaching.

Rohan had found his weapon. Food.

Vikram had not found his weapon yet. He was still looking.

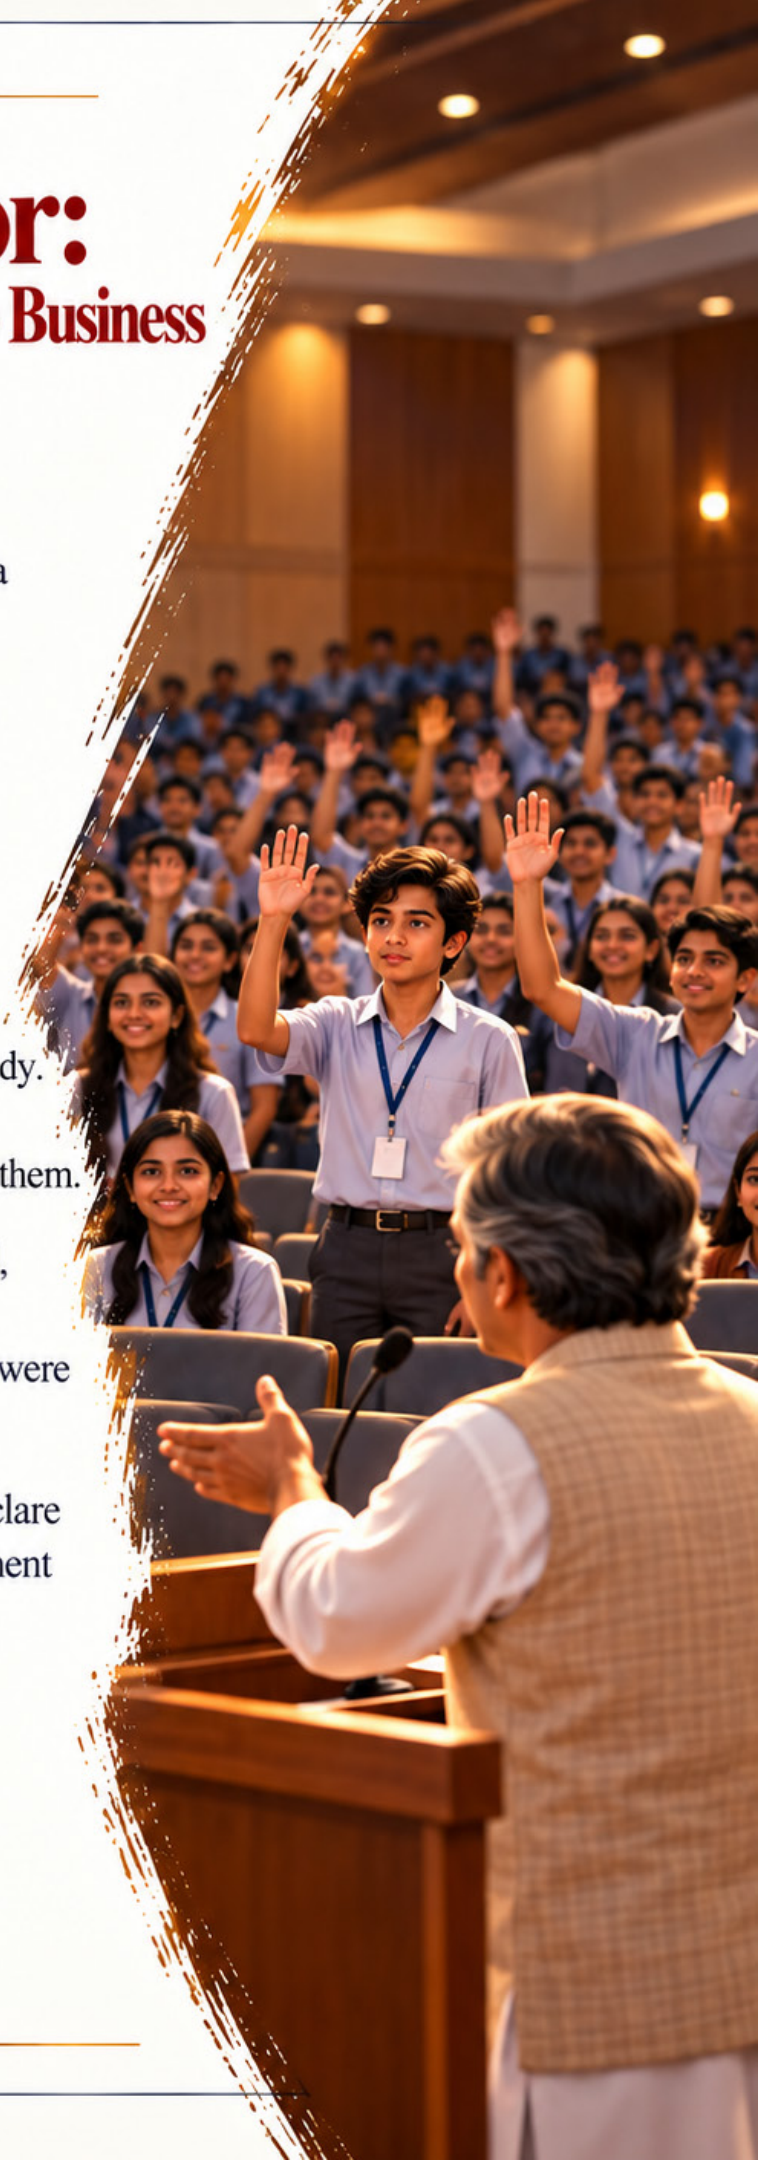
Priya had not even started looking.

Arjun had just begun.

The next chapter would teach him about the gift he did not know he had.

CHAPTER FOUR

The Plus Factor:
What to Do If You Were Born Into Business



The House of Lions

"It is already a gift that your father or mother is in a zone of entrepreneurship."
The speaker looked at the audience.
"Raise your hand if your father gets rental income."
Some hands went up.

"Raise your hand if your mother is self-employed. Doctor. Architect. Lawyer. Tailor. Any skill."
More hands.

"Raise your hand if your father gives salary to somebody. If he has employees. If he runs a business."
The hands went up slowly. Vikram's hand was one of them.

"Those of you with your hands up," the speaker said, "stand up."
They stood. Vikram stood. He looked around. There were maybe 30 students standing.

"Show your face to everybody. Raise both hands. Declare to your friends. Your father or mother gives employment to how many people?"

"Ten," someone said. "Fifty," someone else said.
"Two hundred," Vikram said quietly.

The speaker looked at Vikram. "You," he said.
"You have a kingdom. Why are you sitting here asking for a job?"

The Boy Who Had a Kingdom and Chose a Cubicle

The speaker told Vikram's story without using his name.

"In Kolkata, there was a boy. His father owned a garment factory. 200 employees. Crores in revenue. The boy could have walked into the factory and learned the business. He could have taken it to 2,000 employees. He could have built an empire."

"Instead, the boy went to an MBA college. He paid ₹25 lakhs. He learned case studies. He got a job at a consulting firm. He will earn 15 LPA. He will sit in a cubicle."

"His father is confused. His grandfather is rolling in his grave."

"The boy had a kingdom. He chose a cubicle."

Vikram looked at the floor. His face was red.

"He is not a lion," the speaker said. "He is not even a cat. He is a fool."

The auditorium was silent. Vikram wanted to disappear.

The Girl Who Multiplied the Gift

The speaker told another story.

“In Surat, there was a girl. Her father ran a small diamond polishing workshop. 8 employees. Not crores. Just a small, honest business.

“During COVID, when everything was closed, the girl started an Instagram account. She showed diamond jewelry to young people. She talked like a friend, not a seller. She got 2 lakh followers.”

“Then she started her own brand. Her father’s 8 employees became 25. She multiplied 8 to 25 in 3 years.”

“She understood the law of multiplication. The boy from Kolkata did not.”

The speaker looked at Vikram.

“Which one will you be?”

The Three Types of Families

The speaker drew a chart.

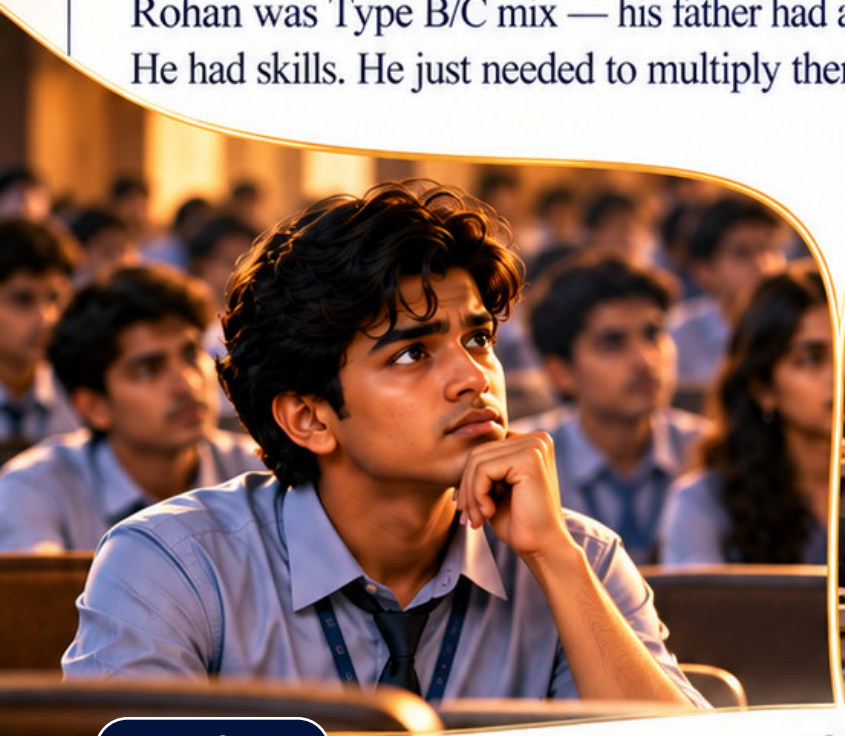
Type	Income Source	Real India Example	Your Advantage	Common Mistake
Type A	Salary job	Government officer, bank manager, TCS employee	None (you're repeating)	Thinking you are safe
Type B	Self-employed	Local doctor, architect, lawyer, tailor, mechanic	Skill-based legacy	Not learning the skill
Type C	Enterprise owner	Factory owner, real estate dealer, wholesale trader, shop owner	Systems-based legacy	Getting an MBA instead of taking over

"Which house were you born into?" the speaker asked.

Arjun was Type A. His father was a government clerk. He had no legacy. He had to build from zero.

Vikram was Type C. He had a kingdom. He was throwing it away.

Rohan was Type B/C mix — his father had a struggling shop, his mother had a pickle business. He had skills. He just needed to multiply them.



The Multiplication Challenge

"If my father is giving employment to 10 people, I will at least give employment to 200 people in your lifetime."

Not 11. Not 20. Two hundred.

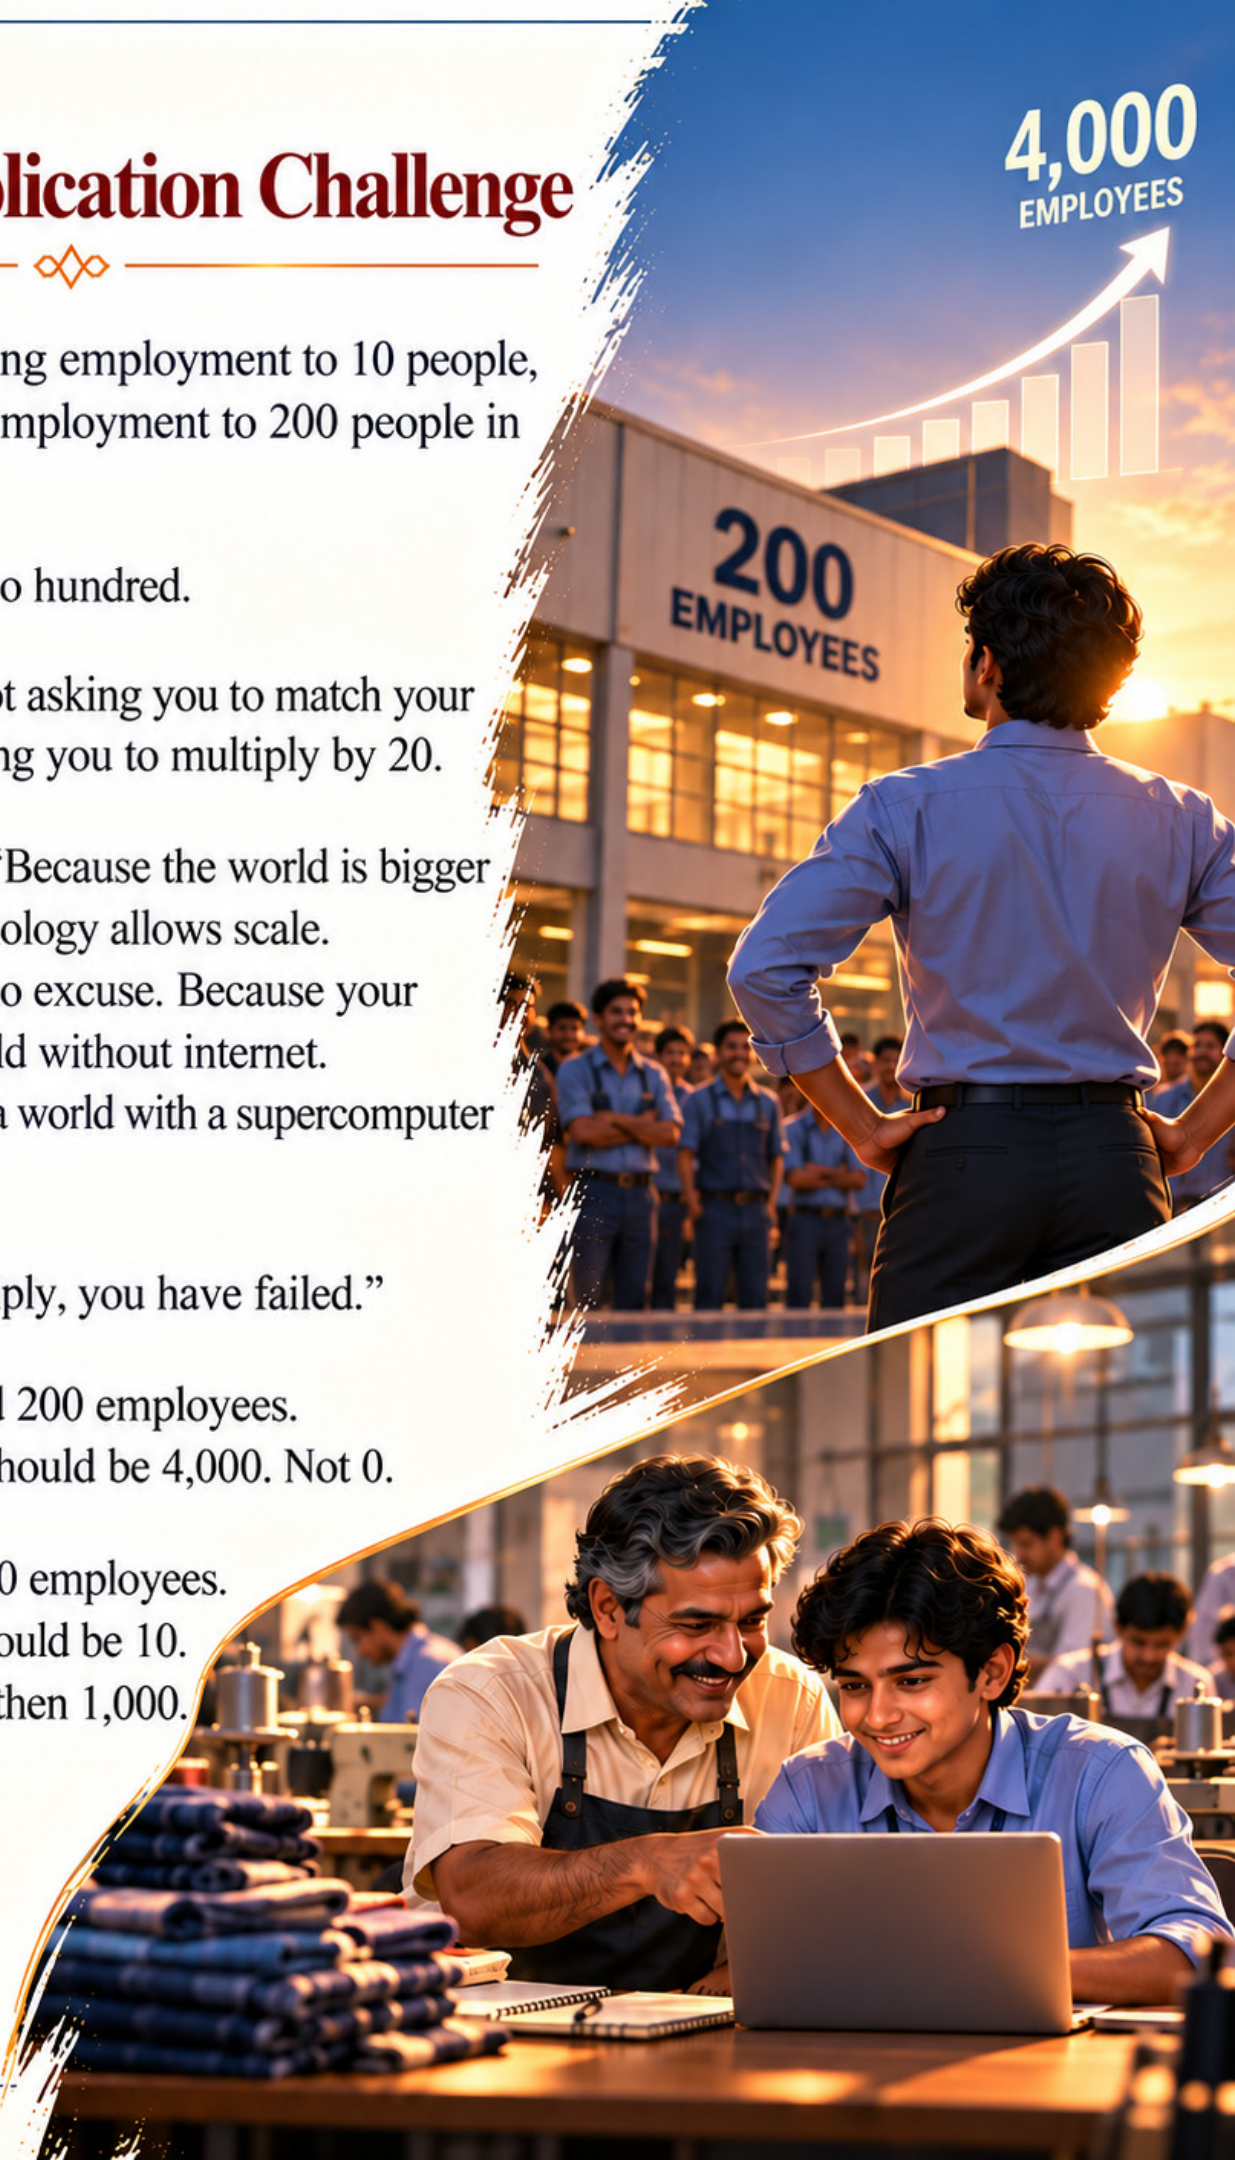
The speaker was not asking you to match your father. He was asking you to multiply by 20.

"Why?" he asked. "Because the world is bigger now. Because technology allows scale. Because you have no excuse. Because your father built in a world without internet. You are building in a world with a supercomputer in your pocket."

"If you do not multiply, you have failed."

Vikram's father had 200 employees.
Vikram's number should be 4,000. Not 0.

Rohan's father had 0 employees.
Rohan's number should be 10.
And then 100. And then 1,000.



The Tragic Question

The speaker asked: "Is your father or mother telling you, 'What is your score? Are you going to get placement?'"

He paused.

"This is the business parent who forgot their own blood. They worked hard to build. They took risks. They slept on floors. They borrowed money from uncles. They made it."

"And now they want you to be safe. They want you to get a job. They have forgotten their own story."

"Forgive them. They love you. But do not obey them. Love and obedience are not the same."

Vikram's father had never said "get a job." Vikram's father had said "take over the factory." But Vikram was embarrassed of the factory. He wanted a "respectable" job.

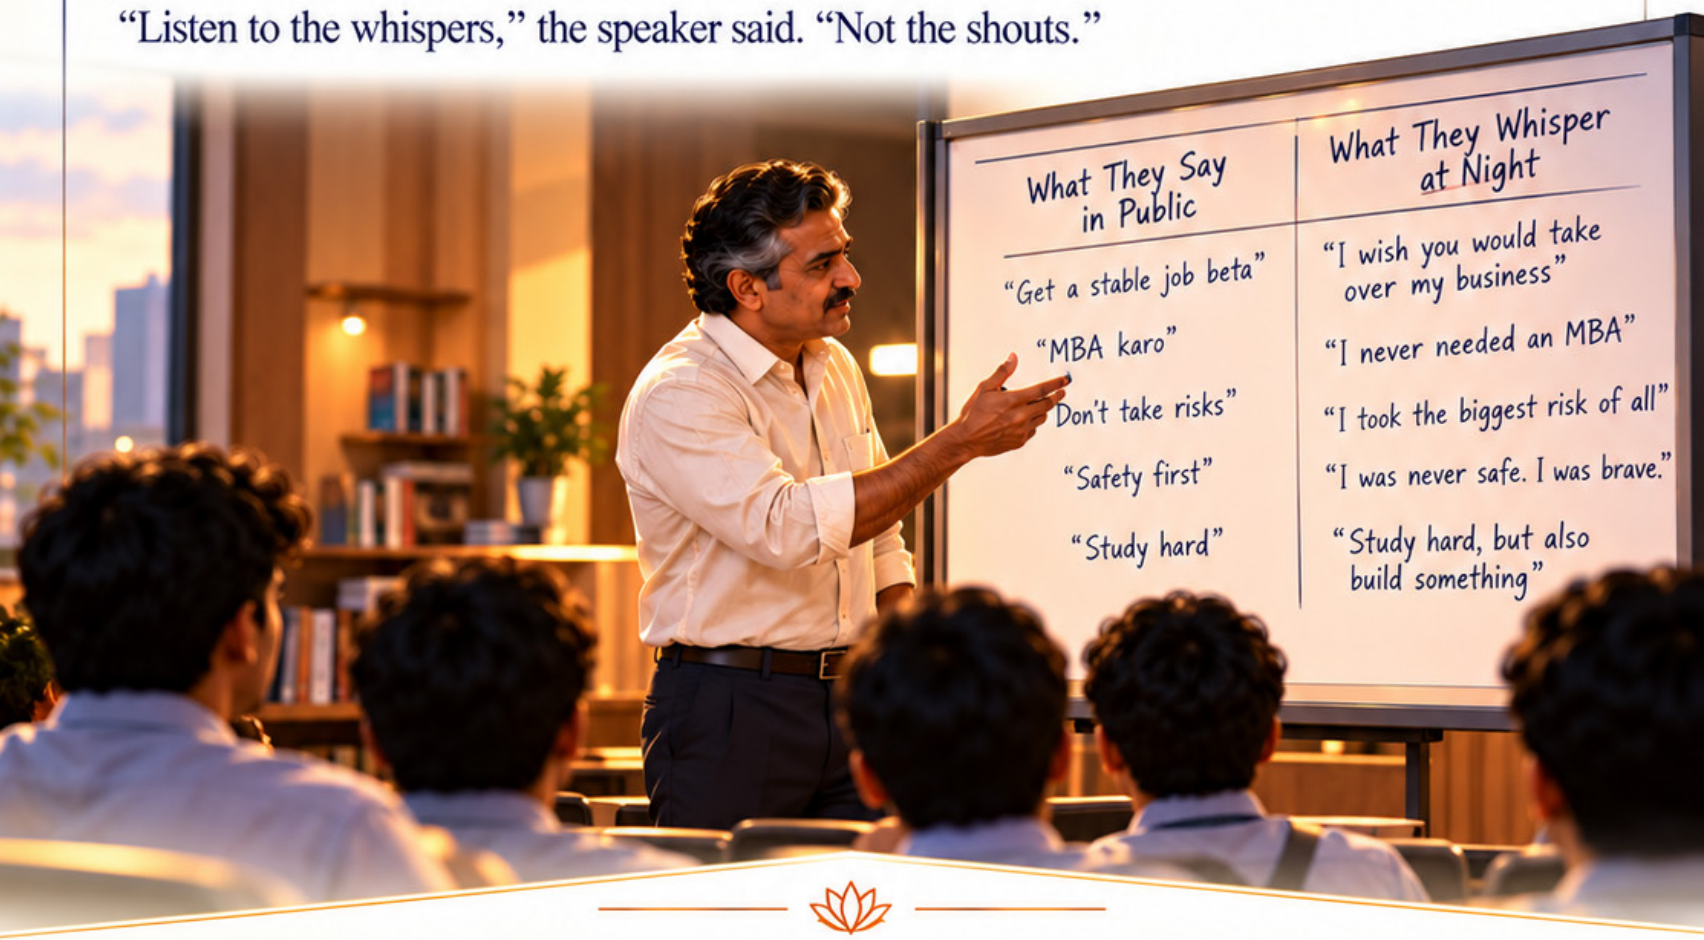
Vikram was embarrassed of his own inheritance.

What Business Parents Say vs. What They Mean

The speaker wrote on the board.

What They Say in Public	What They Whisper at Night
“Get a stable job beta”	“I wish you would take over my business”
“MBA karo”	“I never needed an MBA”
“Don’t take risks”	“I took the biggest risk of all”
“Safety first”	“I was never safe. I was brave.”
“Study hard”	“Study hard, but also build something”

“Listen to the whispers,” the speaker said. “Not the shouts.”



The Story of the Second Generation Curse

The speaker told a story.

“There is a curse. It is called the Second Generation Curse.

“The first generation builds. They work hard. They sacrifice. They sleep on floors. They build a kingdom.

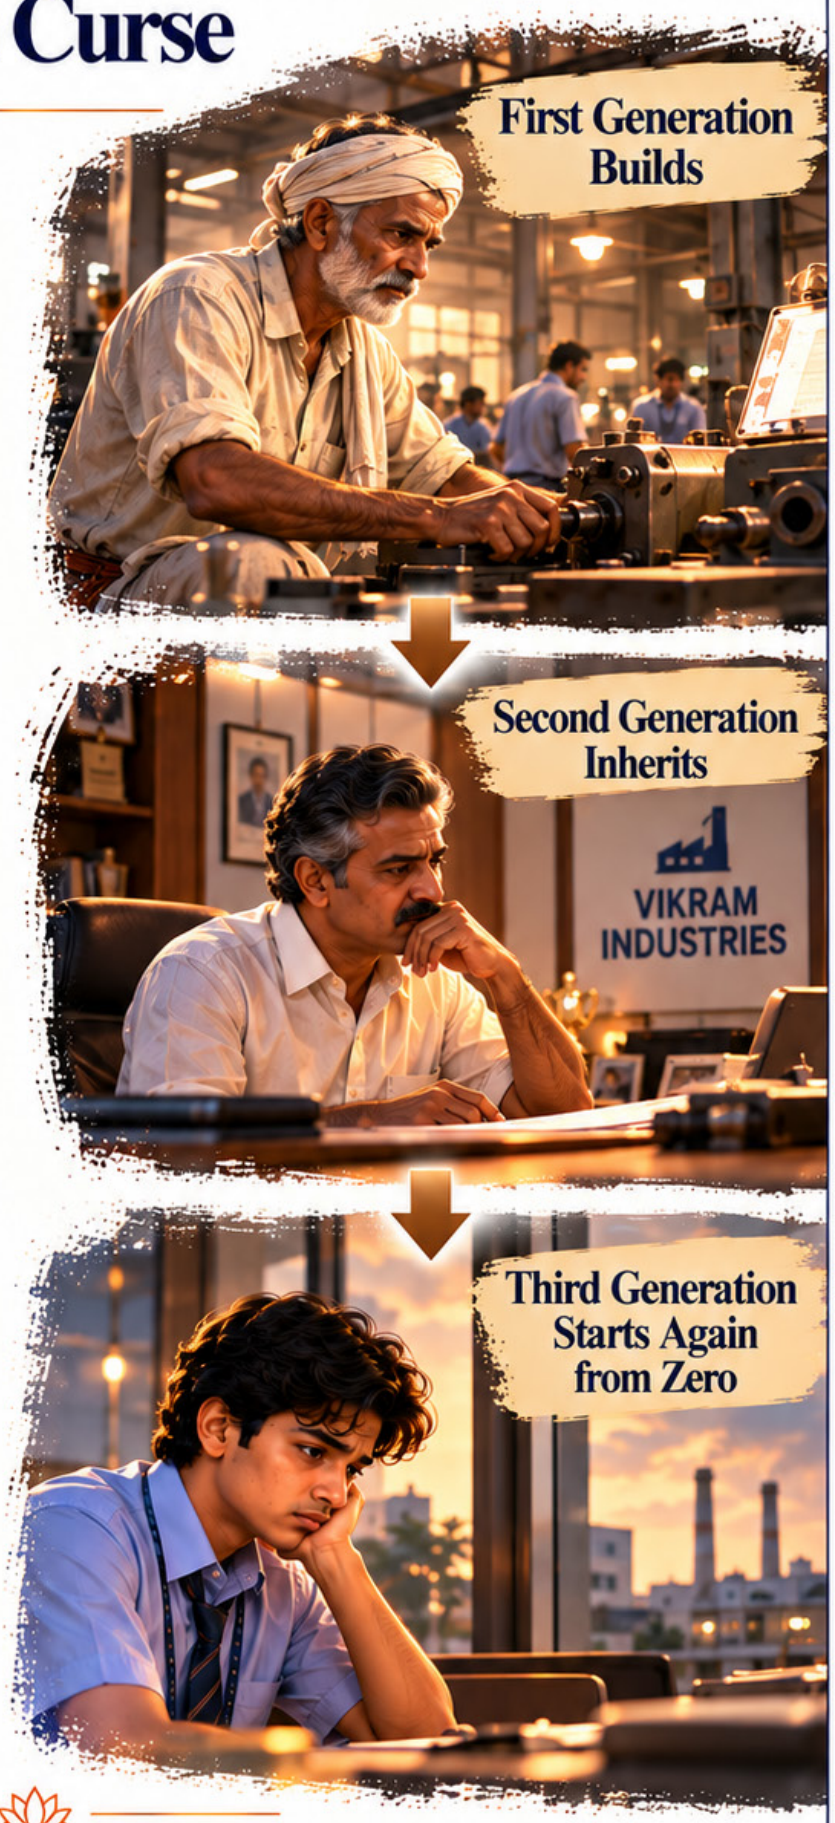
“The second generation inherits. They go to good schools. They get MBAs. They get jobs. They lose the kingdom.

“The third generation starts again from zero.

“Do not be the curse. Be the blessing.”

Vikram’s grandfather had built the factory. Vikram’s father had grown it. Vikram was the third generation. He was about to lose it.

The speaker’s words hit him like a punch.



The Family Business Audit

The speaker gave the students an exercise.

If your family has any business, self-employment, or rental income, answer these questions:

1. What is the exact number of people your parent gives employment to? _____
2. Do you know the profit margins of the business? Yes / No
3. Have you ever worked in that business for one full week? Yes / No
4. Do you know the three biggest problems the business faces? _____
5. What is stopping you from learning the business and multiplying it? _____

Vikram answered the questions.

1. 200 employees.
2. No. He had no idea.
3. No. He had never stepped inside the factory.
4. No. He had never asked.
5. "I am embarrassed of the factory. My friends have fancy jobs. I don't want to be a 'factory owner.'"

The truth hurt. But the truth was the first step.

The Story of the Reluctant Heir

The speaker told a story.

"There was a boy in Ahmedabad. His father owned a small hardware store. The boy was ashamed. He wanted to be an engineer. He wanted a white-collar job.

"He studied hard. He got a degree. He got a job at a tech company. He was happy.

"Then his father got sick. The boy had to take over the store. Just temporarily.

"He started posting the store's products on Instagram. He started a WhatsApp catalog. He started delivering.

"Within two years, the store had 10 times the revenue. He quit his tech job. He hired 20 employees."

"Today, he is not embarrassed. He is proud. His friends from the tech company ask him for jobs."

"Do not be ashamed of your inheritance. Be ashamed of wasting it."

The Law of Multiplication

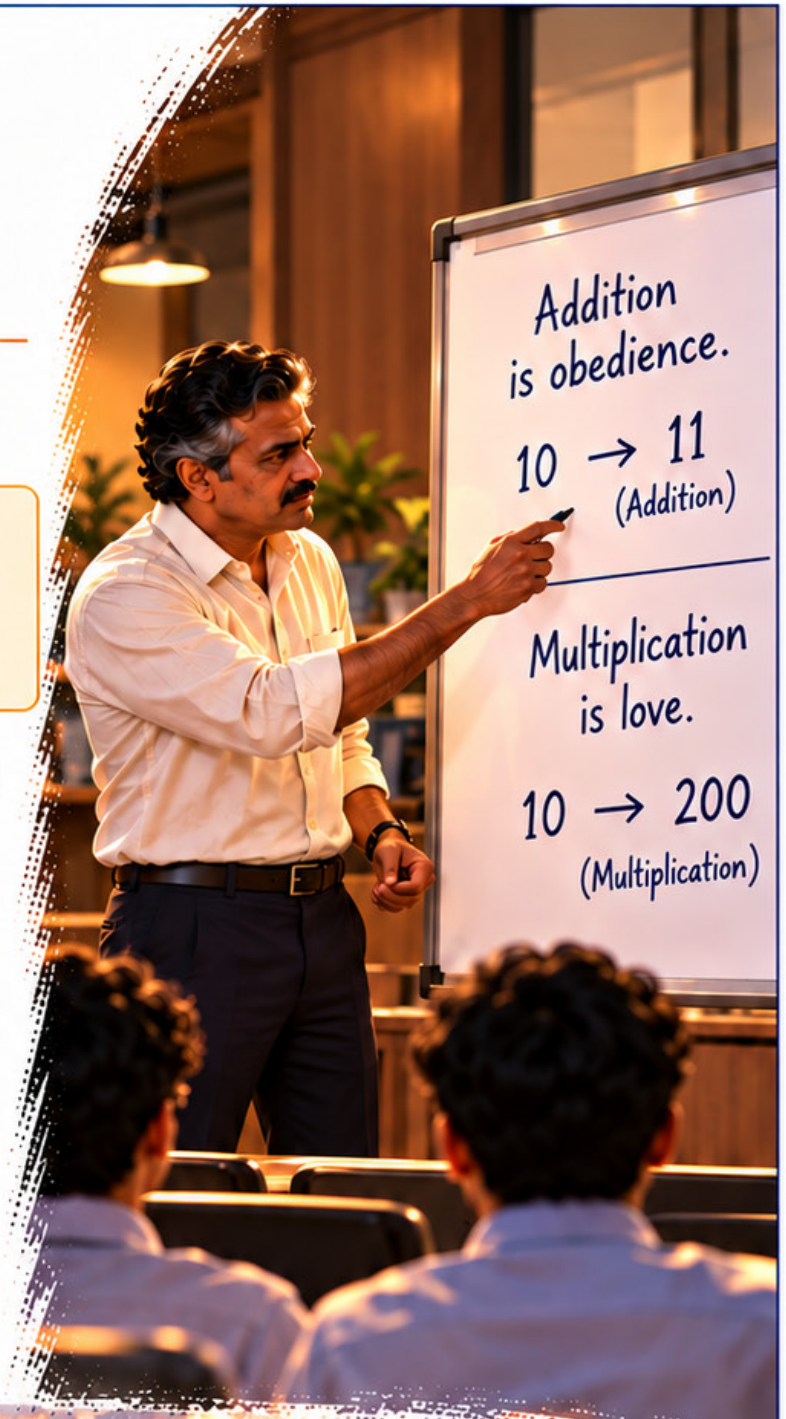
The speaker wrote on the board:

Addition is obedience.
Multiplication is love.

“Your father gave you 10. If you give back 11, you have added. That is obedience. That is safe. That is small.”

“Your father gave you 10. If you give back 200, you have multiplied. That is love. That is courage. That is royal.”

“Multiplication is how you honor your parents. Not by copying them. By exceeding them.”



The First Generation Lion

The speaker saved a special word for those whose parents never built anything.

“Your parents never built anything. They worked for someone. You have no model. No guidance. No safety net.”

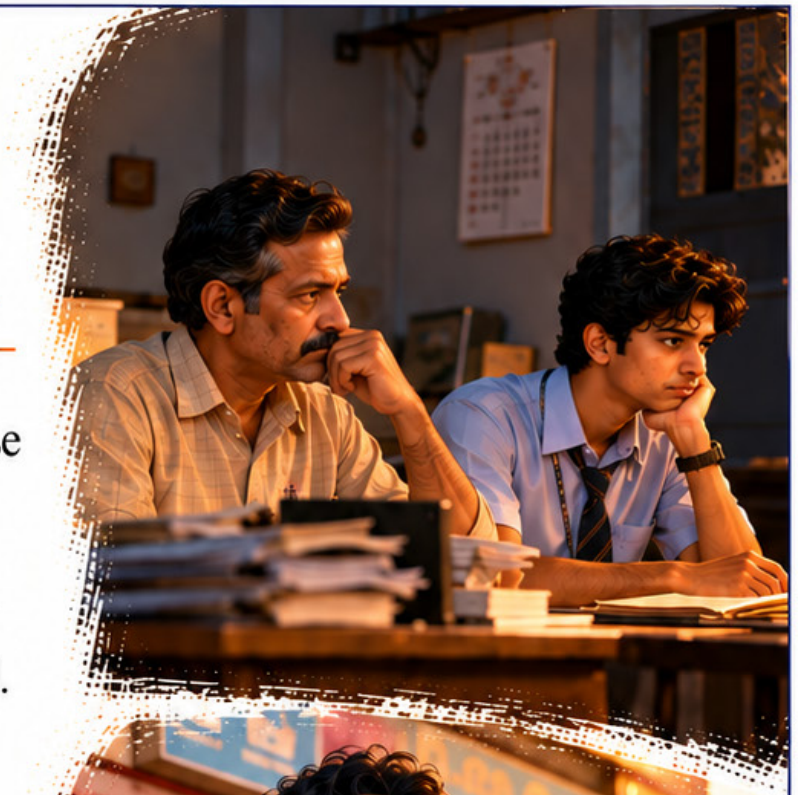
“Good.”

“You also have no ceiling. No legacy to repeat. No mistakes to copy. You are free to build whatever you want.”

“The first generation lion is the bravest lion of all.”

Arjun’s father was a government clerk. Arjun was first generation. He had no ceiling. But he was choosing a ceiling. He was choosing a job.

Rohan’s father had a struggling shop. Rohan was also first generation. He was building. He was the bravest lion in the room.



The Story of the First Generation Lion

The speaker told a story.

"There was a boy in a small village in Bihar. His father was a daily wage laborer. His mother worked in the fields.

The boy had nothing. No connections. No money. No safety net.

He learned coding from YouTube. He built a small app. He sold it for 50 lakhs.

His father still works in the fields. But now, he works because he wants to. Not because he has to.

"The boy is 22. He is a lion."

"Do not tell me you have nothing. This boy had nothing. He built something."

The Five Questions for Business Children

The speaker gave five questions for those born into business.

1. Question One:
   Do you know how much your family business earns? Not the revenue. The profit.

2. Question Two:
   Do you know the three biggest problems the business faces?

3. Question Three:
   Have you ever worked in the business for one week without complaining?

4. Question Four:
   Do you know the names of the employees? Not the managers. The workers.

5. Question Five:
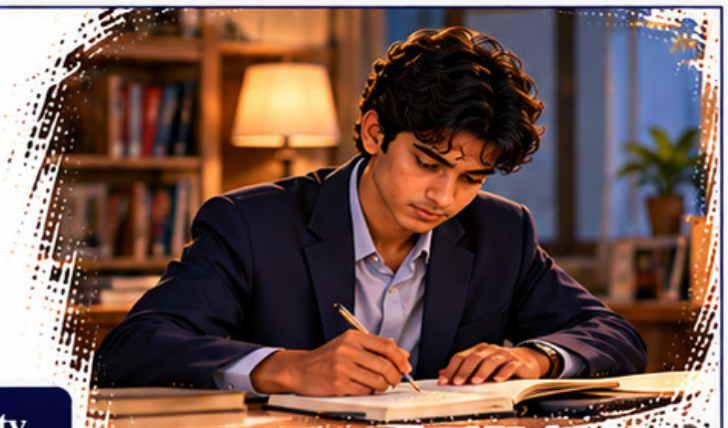
   What have you built that is bigger than the business you inherited?

"If you cannot answer these questions," the speaker said, "you are not an heir. You are a visitor. Start acting like an owner."

Chapter Four Summary



You Were Born Into	Your Responsibility
Rental income →	Learn asset management
Self-employed parent →	Learn the craft, then scale it
Enterprise-owning parent →	Multiply by 20x

The Law of Multiplication:

Addition is obedience.
Multiplication is love.

Your Decision Today:

Will you waste your inheritance or multiply it?

Chapter Four: Practical Exercises

1 Exercise 1: The Family Business Audit

If your family has a business, answer:

- Number of employees: _____
- Do you know the profit margins? Yes / No
- Have you worked in it for one week? Yes / No
- Three biggest problems: _____

- What is stopping you? _____

2 Exercise 2: The Multiplication Goal

If your parent gives employment to X people, your goal is X × 20.

- My parent gives employment to: _____ people.
- My goal: _____ people.

3 Exercise 3: The First Generation Declaration

If your parents never built anything, write:

"I am first generation.
I have no ceiling.
I will build from zero."

Chapter Four: Quotes to Remember

Write these down. Paste them on your wall. Read them every morning.

> "It is already a gift that your father or mother is in a zone of entrepreneurship."

> "If my father is giving employment to 10 people, I will at least give employment to 200 people in your lifetime."

> "You have been given a gift. Do not waste it asking for a job. Multiply it."

> "If your parents built something, you are not a 'job seeker.' You are an heir. Act like one."

Chapter Four: The Lion's Roar

Stand up. Take a deep breath. Say this out loud:

> I am not a visitor. I am not a waste.
> I am an heir. I will learn. I will multiply.
> I will honor my parents by exceeding them.
> Addition is obedience. Multiplication is love."

Vikram sat in the auditorium. His face was still red. His hands were shaking. He had been called a fool. In front of 300 people. And he knew the speaker was right.

He had a kingdom. He was choosing a cubicle.

He was ashamed of his father's factory. His father, who had slept on the floor. His father, who had built something from nothing.

Vikram had never worked a single hard day in his life. He had a BMW at 21. He had never earned a rupee.

He was a cat wearing lion's clothes.

That night, Vikram called his father. He said, "Papa, I am not going to the MBA."

His father was silent. Then he said, "Beta, do you know what you are doing?"

Vikram said, "No, Papa. But I know what I am not doing. I am not wasting your legacy."

His father cried. Vikram cried. They talked for three hours.

The next day, Vikram went to the factory. For the first time. He walked through the floor. He touched the machines. He asked the workers their names.

He was 22. He was starting from zero. But he was no longer a fool.

The Bridge to Chapter Five

Arjun had no family business. He was first generation. He had to build from zero.

Vikram had a family business. He had to learn and multiply.

Rohan had a struggling family business. He had already started multiplying.

Neha had no family business. She had built from zero.

Priya had no family business. She had chosen the job.

Four different starting points. Four different choices.

The next chapter would teach them about the temple they should not enter.

CHAPTER FIVE

The Temple of Cats: Why the MBA for Employment Is a Waste of Time

The Temple of Cats

> "Friends, the MBA that is given around is MBA for employment."

The speaker leaned forward.

"I am about to make many people angry. But I do not care. Because the truth is more important than your feelings."

He paused.

"The standard MBA is a temple. A temple for worshipping employment. Do not enter that temple."

The ₹25 Lakh Mistake

The speaker told a story.

"In Mumbai, there was a girl named Anjali. She did B.Com. Then she did MBA from NMIMS. Fees: ₹24 lakhs. Living expenses: ₹10 lakhs. Total cost: ₹35 lakhs.

"She took a loan."

"She got placed at HDFC Bank. Salary: 12 LPA. Her EMI: ₹35,000 per month."

"After EMI, rent, food, travel – she had ₹15,000 left. Per month.

"She is 25 years old. She has a 'prestigious' MBA. She cannot afford a vacation. She cannot afford to quit. She cannot afford to dream."

"Anjali paid ₹35 lakhs to become a cat."

The auditorium was silent. Many students had MBA dreams. Those dreams were cracking.

The Boy Who Skipped the Temple

The speaker told another story.

"In Delhi, there was a boy named Dhruv. He did B.Com from a local college. No one knew his college's name. No one cared about his grades.

"During lockdown, he started an Instagram page. He taught stock market basics. He posted every day. He answered every comment. He built a community.

"He built 5 lakh followers. Then he launched a paid community. ₹999 per year.

"50,000 members joined. His revenue: ₹5 crore per year.

"He has no MBA. He has no loan. He has a business."

"Dhruv did not go to the temple of cats. He built his own temple."

The Two MBAs

The speaker drew a chart.

	Employment MBA	Entrepreneurship MBA
Where	IIM, NMIMS, XLRI, Symbiosis	The internet, the market, failure
Cost	₹20-40 lakhs	₹0 + your time
Duration	2 years	Lifetime
Taught by	Professors who never built anything	Customers who reject you
Outcome	A job offer	A business
Loan needed?	Yes (usually)	No
EMI after graduation	₹30k-50k per month	₹0

"Which MBA are you choosing?" the speaker asked.

Vikram had chosen the Employment MBA. He was paying ₹25 lakhs to learn how to be a good employee. He had just decided not to go.

Rohan had chosen the Entrepreneurship MBA. He was paying ₹0 to learn how to be a good employer.

The Temple You Should Not Enter

"You and me should not go to that temple. That is only for those people who are going to be jumping for jobs."

The speaker called the MBA program a "temple." But a temple for what? For worshipping employment.

Every case study. Every group project. Every placement talk. Every alumni network event. All designed to make you a better employee. Not an employer. Not a founder. Not a lion.

"Let others go to that temple," the speaker said. "They will work for you."

Vikram's face had been pale. Now it was determined. He had made the right choice.

Our MBA Is Different

"Our MBA is different. People are going to work for you. They have to study that MBA. You should not do that MBA."

The speaker said: "Let other people study the regular MBA. They will work for you. They will manage your processes. They will run your spreadsheets. They will write your reports."

"Your MBA is the market. Your MBA is failure. Your MBA is building something and selling it."

Rohan had never stepped into a B-school. But he had learned more in one year of running his cloud kitchen than any MBA textbook could teach.

Our MBA Is Different

"Our MBA is different. People are going to work for you. They have to study that MBA. You should not do that MBA."

The speaker said: "Let other people study the regular MBA. They will work for you. They will manage your processes. They will run your spreadsheets. They will write your reports."

"Your MBA is the market. Your MBA is failure. Your MBA is building something and selling it."

Rohan had never stepped into a B-school. But he had learned more in one year of running his cloud kitchen than any MBA textbook could teach.

The Four Subjects of the Real MBA

The speaker wrote on the board.

Subject	Where to Learn It	Cost	What You Gain
Market MBA	Talk to 100 potential customers	₹0	Understanding of real problems
Sales MBA	Try to sell something on Instagram	₹0 + your dignity	Thick skin
Failure MBA	Start something, watch it fail	₹0 + your tears	Wisdom
Scale MBA	Grow from 1 to 1000 customers	₹0 + sleepless nights	Systems

"No classroom teaches these. The street teaches these."

Neha had learned the Market MBA by reading comments.

Rohan had learned the Sales MBA by getting rejected by 50 cafes.

Ritika had learned the Failure MBA by losing ₹50,000 in defective fabric.

They had all paid their fees.
Just not to a college.

The Story of the B-School Professor

The speaker told a story.

"There was a B-school professor. He taught marketing. He was very good. His students got jobs at top companies.

"One day, a student asked him: 'Sir, why don't you start your own company?"

"The professor smiled. 'I am comfortable here,' he said."

He had never built anything. He had only taught. He was teaching students how to build. But he had never built himself.

"Do not take building advice from people who have never built. Do not take hunting advice from cats."

The MBA Trap in Numbers

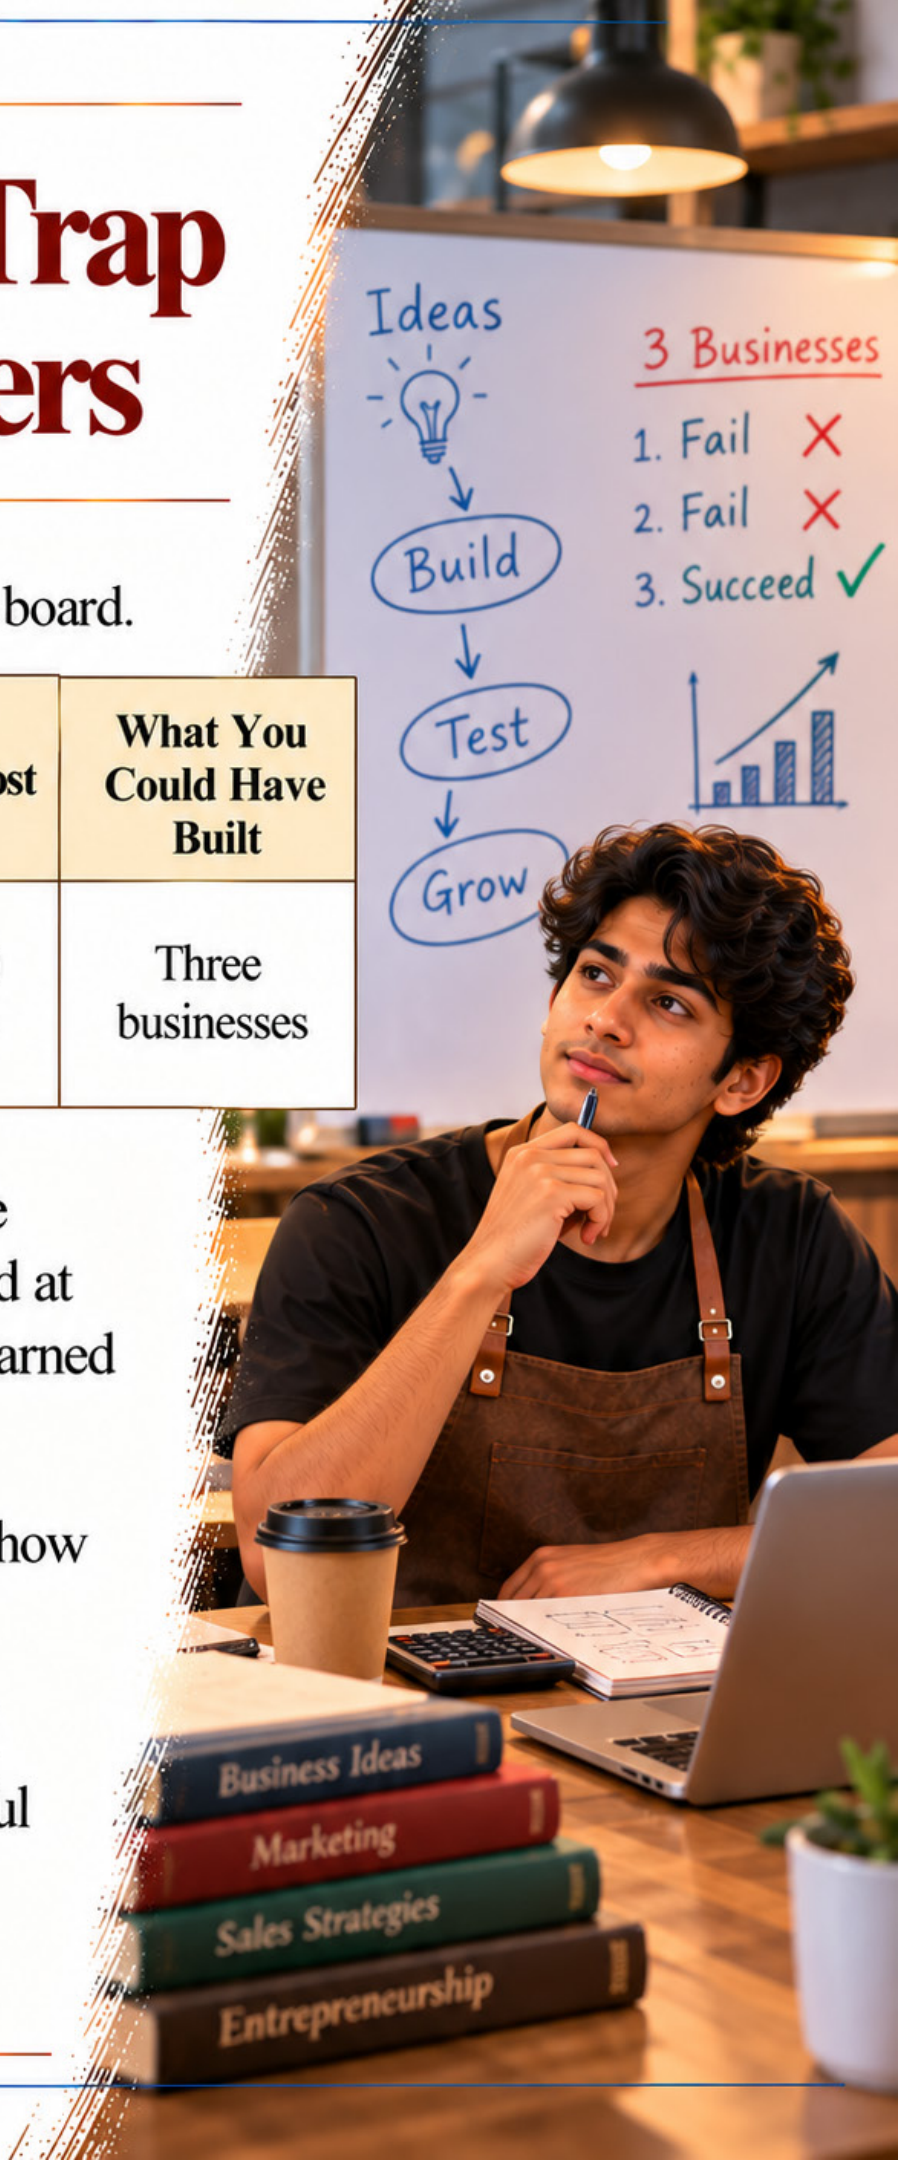
The speaker did the math on the board.

Investment	Opportunity Cost	Total Cost	What You Could Have Built
₹25 lakhs fees	2 years of earning (₹12 lakhs)	₹30-40 lakhs	Three businesses

"For ₹40 lakhs, you could have started three businesses. Failed at two. Succeeded at one. And learned more than any case study."

"But instead, you paid to learn how to work for someone else."

Vikram did the math. He had almost paid. He was grateful he had not.



The 2-Year ROI Calculation

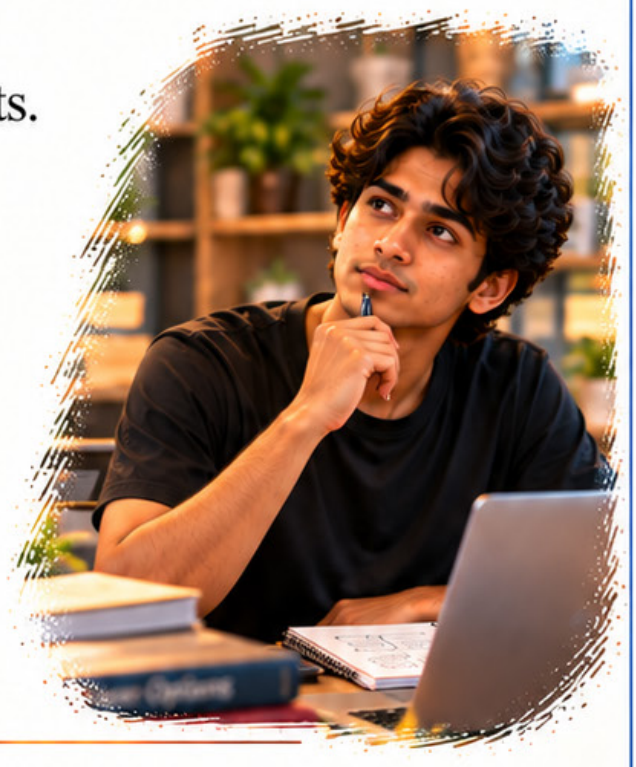
The speaker asked the students to fill out a table.

Option	Total Cost	Income after 2 years	Freedom (1-10)
MBA + Job	₹25 lakhs + 2 years	₹12 LPA	3
Start a side hustle	₹5,000	₹0 to ₹∞	6
Join family business	₹0	Depends on you	8
Work + build on weekends	₹10,000	Depends on you	7

"Which one makes sense for YOU?" the speaker asked. "Not for your parents. Not for your relatives. For you."

Vikram looked at the numbers. He looked at his father's factory. He had already made his choice.

Arjun looked at the numbers. He was still in his job. He was still earning. He was still a cat.



What MBA Graduates Actually Do

The speaker said quietly: “MBA people are going to work for you.”

“Look at any successful entrepreneur. Do they have an MBA? Sometimes. But not always.

“But look at who works for them. Who manages their finances? Who runs their operations? Who handles their marketing?”

MBA graduates.

“The MBA teaches you to be a lieutenant. Entrepreneurship teaches you to be the general.”

Vikram had always wanted to be a general. He was training to be a lieutenant. He had almost made a terrible mistake.

The Exception That Proves the Rule

The speaker acknowledged: "Yes, some entrepreneurs have MBAs.
But they did not become entrepreneurs because of the MBA.
They became entrepreneurs despite the MBA."

"The MBA gave them a network. Not a mindset.
It gave them classmates. Not courage.
It gave them case studies. Not scars.

"You can get a network by attending conferences.
You cannot get a mindset from a textbook."

Rohan had no network. He had 2 lakh followers.
That was better than any alumni directory."

The Exception That Proves the Rule

The speaker acknowledged: “Yes, some entrepreneurs have MBAs. But they did not become entrepreneurs because of the MBA. They became entrepreneurs despite the MBA.”

“The MBA gave them a network. Not a mindset.
It gave them classmates. Not courage.
It gave them case studies. Not scars.”

“You can get a network by attending conferences. You cannot get a mindset from a textbook.”

Rohan had no network. He had 2 lakh followers. That was better than any alumni directory.

The Story of the Two Batchmates

The speaker told a story.
“There were two batchmates. Same college. Same year. Same dreams.

One did an MBA from IIM. He got a job at a bank. He earns 25 LPA. He has a 40 lakh loan. He works 12 hours a day. He is 30. He is tired.

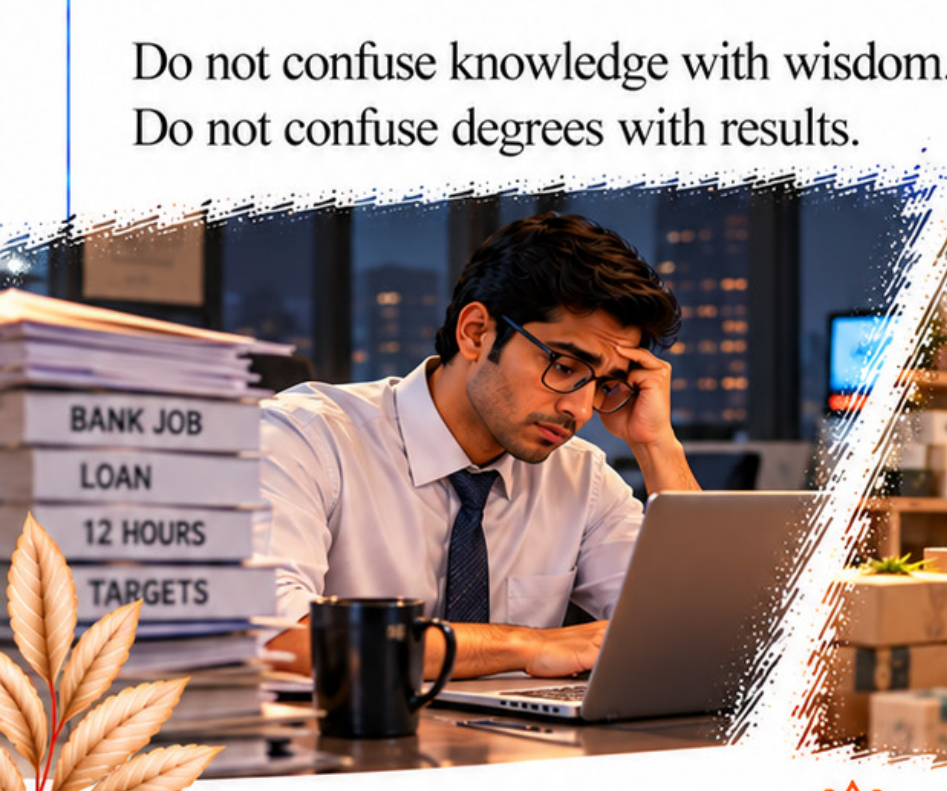
The other did not do an MBA. He started a small business selling handmade soap on Instagram. He failed twice. Then he succeeded.

Today, he has 100 employees. He earns more than his batchmate. He works 6 hours a day. He is 30. He is free.

The MBA batchmate asks: ‘How did you do it?”

The soap seller says: ‘I did not spend 2 years learning case studies. I spent 2 years learning customers.”

Do not confuse knowledge with wisdom.
Do not confuse degrees with results.



The Five Questions Before an MBA

The speaker gave five questions for anyone considering an MBA.

1. Question One:
   What will I learn in an MBA that I cannot learn for free on the internet?

2. Question Two:
   Will this MBA help me build something or just help me get a job?

3. Question Three:
   Can I use the ₹25 lakhs to start a business instead?

4. Question Four:
   Will I be proud of this MBA when I am 80?

5. Question Five:
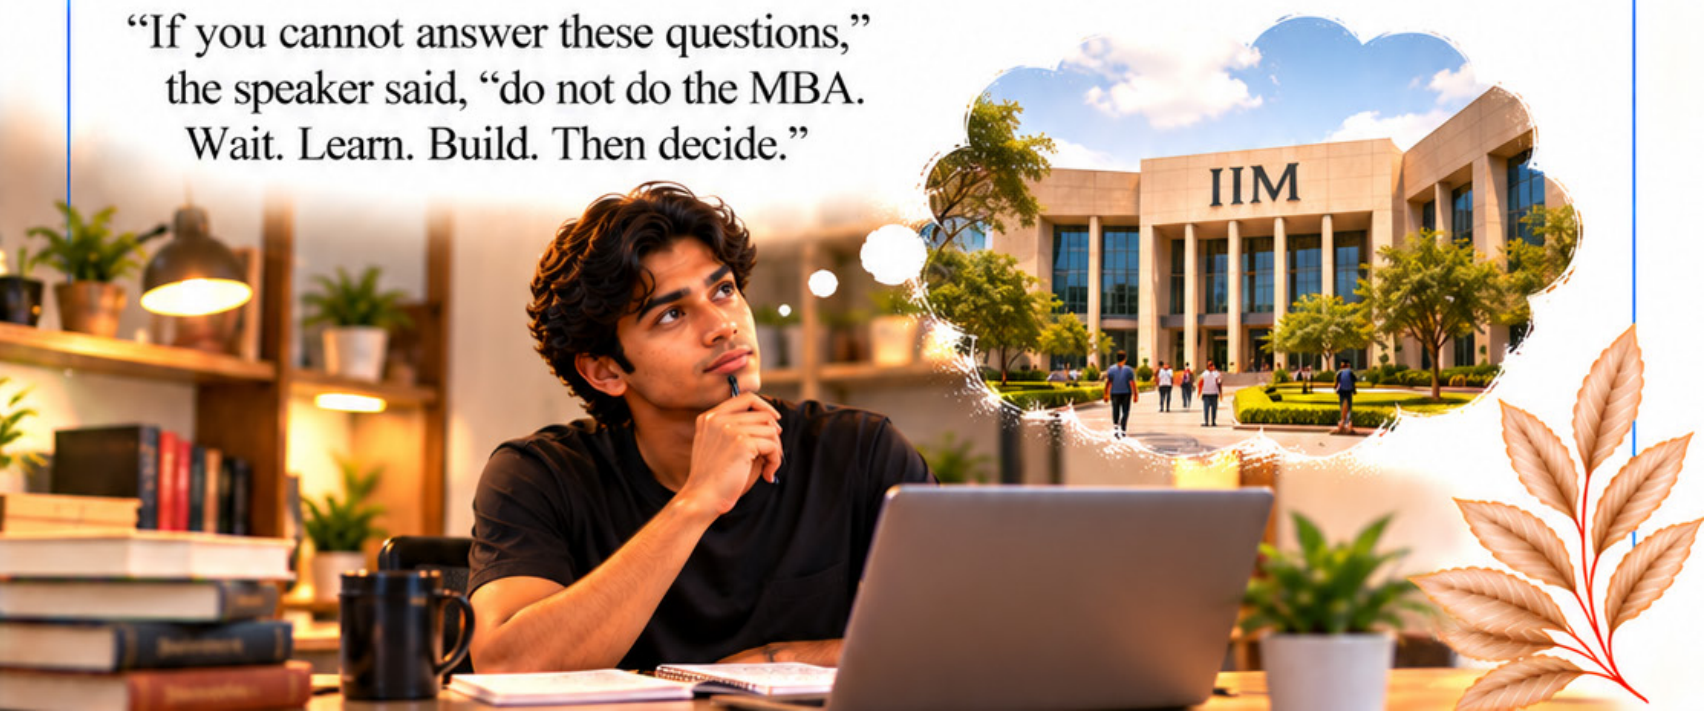
   Who is telling me to do this MBA?
   Have they built anything themselves?

"If you cannot answer these questions," the speaker said, "do not do the MBA. Wait. Learn. Build. Then decide."



Chapter Five Summary

Regular MBA	Entrepreneur's MBA
For employees	For employers
Costs money	Makes money
2 years	Lifetime
Case studies	Real failures
Loan required	Zero debt

The Four Subjects of the Real MBA:

1. Market MBA (talk to customers)
2. Sales MBA (sell something)
3. Failure MBA (fail and learn)
4. Scale MBA (grow from 1 to 1000)

Your Decision Today:

Will you study how to work for others or learn how others work for you?

Chapter Five: Practical Exercises

1 Exercise 1: The 2-Year ROI Calculation

Fill this out for yourself:

Option	Total Cost	Income after 2 years	Freedom (1-10)
MBA + Job
Start a side hustle
Join family business
Work + build on weekends

2 Exercise 2: The Five Questions

Answer these before any degree:

1. What can I learn for free? _____
2. Will this help me build or just get a job? _____
3. Can I use this money to start something? _____
4. Will I be proud of this at 80? _____
5. Who is advising me? Have they built anything? _____

3 Exercise 3: The Real MBA

Which of the four real MBA subjects do you need most right now? (Tick one or more)

- ☐ Market (talk to customers)
- ☐ Sales (sell something)
- ☐ Failure (fail and learn)
- ☐ Scale (grow from 1 to 1000)

Chapter Five: Quotes to Remember

Write these down. Paste them on your wall. Read them every morning.

> Friends,
> the MBA that is given > around is MBA for > employment.

> You and me should > not go to that temple.
> That is only for those people > who are going to be > jumping for jobs.

> Our MBA is different.
> People are going > to work for you.

> Degrees are for > employees.
> Experiments are for > entrepreneurs.

The Story of Vikram's Decision (Continued)

Vikram had decided not to go to the MBA. His friends thought he was crazy.

"IIM chod raha hai? Pagal hai kya?"

But Vikram had seen the math. ₹25 lakhs. 2 years. A job at the end. A loan at the beginning.

He looked at his father's factory. 200 employees. A legacy. A kingdom.

He walked into the factory the next morning. He said to his father: "Papa, teach me."

His father smiled. He had been waiting 22 years for these words.

Vikram started at the bottom. He swept the floor. He packed boxes. He learned the machines. He learned the workers' names. He learned the profit margins.

For the first time in his life, Vikram worked. Really worked.

He was no longer a cat wearing lion's clothes. He was a lion cub. Learning to hunt.

The Bridge to Chapter Six

Arjun was still in his cubicle.
Vikram was in his father's factory.
Rohan was in his cloud kitchen.
Neha was in her home studio.
Priya was still at TCS.

Four different paths.
Four different speeds.

The next chapter would teach them about the balloon seller. The simplest entrepreneur they had ever seen. The one who taught the most important lesson of all.

CHAPTER SIX

The Balloon Seller: How to Create 1000x Returns from Nothing

The Balloon Seller of Pondicherry

"Go to Pondicherry beach. Somebody's selling balloons. He is an entrepreneur to me."

The speaker smiled.
He had been angry.
He had been shouting.
Now he smiled.

"Let me tell you about the richest man you have never noticed."

CHAPTER SIX

The Richest Man on the Beach

The Richest Man on the Beach

On Promenade Beach in Pondicherry, there is a man named Murugan. He is 45 years old. He sells balloons.

He buys a balloon for 50 paisa. He blows air into it with his mouth. He twists the balloon into a peacock. It takes him 2 minutes.

He sells the peacock balloon for ₹200 to ₹500.

On a good day, he sells 100 balloons. Gross: ₹20,000 to ₹50,000. Cost of goods: ₹50. Profit margin: 99.9%.

> "Which tech startup has a 99.9% profit margin?" the speaker asked. "None. Which mutual fund gives a 1000x return? None."

And yet, young people walk past Murugan every day. They are looking for 'big opportunities.' They do not see the lion in front of them.

CHAPTER SIX

The Math of the Balloon Seller

The speaker wrote on the board.

Cost	Selling Price	ROI
₹0.50	₹500	100,000%

Then he compared:

Investment	Return	ROI
Bank FD	7% per year	7%
Stock Market	10–15% per year	15%
Real Estate	6–8% per year	8%
Kirana store	60–120% per year	100%
Balloon Seller	1000x per balloon	100,000%

"The balloon seller beats every investment on this list. And he started with 50 paisa."

"What is your 50 paisa? What is the small thing you can turn into something big?"

The Digital Balloon Sellers

The speaker said: "Today, your balloon is digital."

Creator	Their "Balloon"	Cost	Selling Price	ROI
Technical Guruji	Tech review video	₹0 (phone + internet)	₹10-50 lakhs per video	∞
Slayy Point	Comedy script	₹0	₹10-30 lakhs per video	∞
Your local meme page	Meme template	₹0	₹5,000-50,000 per post	∞
Rohan (our story)	Food review + cloud kitchen	₹0 (his phone)	₹1 lakh per month	∞

"Your phone is your balloon. Your skill is your breath. Start twisting."

CHAPTER SIX

The Story of the Meme Page Owner

The speaker told a story.

"There was a boy in Indore. He was in college. He had no money. He had no skills. He had a phone.

He started a meme page. He posted every day. He followed trends. He learned what people liked.

One year later, he had 5 lakh followers. Brands paid him ₹50,000 per post.

He graduated from college. He did not need a job. He had a business.

His friends from college ask him for referrals now. He gives them. To his own company.

"Do not tell me you have nothing. You have a phone. You have the internet. You have a brain. That is enough."

CHAPTER SIX

The Obsession with Big Bank Balances

"How many of you will be happy when your pocket is full of money? Your job will ensure that."

But the speaker warned: "Those who put money in the bank and say 'my angry money'... that is not the life."

He was talking about people who hoard salary leftovers. They save. They invest. They die with a big number in their bank account.

"That is not entrepreneurship. That is anxious hoarding. That is a cat counting its kibble."

Priya had been doing this. She had ₹50,000 in her bank account. She felt safe. She was not safe. She was trapped.

CHAPTER SIX

The Two Fools

The speaker named two types of people he did not care about.

The Pocket Fool

Wants cash in pocket to show off.
Buys things to impress people.
Dies broke but looking rich.

The Bank Fool

Wants a big bank balance to feel safe.

Saves every rupee.

Dies rich but having never lived.

"Neither understands entrepreneurship."

"The entrepreneur wants neither pocket money nor bank money. The entrepreneur wants other people's money flowing through their systems."

Murugan the balloon seller understood this. He did not save his money in a bank. He bought more balloons. He hired an assistant. He expanded to two beaches.

CHAPTER SIX

The Flow of Money in Entrepreneurship

"People want to come and give you money. They will want to put money in your pocket. They will want to put money in your account."

"This is the definition of entrepreneurship," the speaker said.

"You do not put money in your pocket. Other people put money in your pocket."

Investors. Customers. Partners. They all queue up to give you money. Why? Because you solve a problem they cannot solve themselves. Because you create value they cannot create alone. Because you are the lion."

Neha

Had 50,000 people paying for her course.

Rohan

Had 2 lakh followers.

Murugan

Had 100 customers a day.

Money was flowing to them. They were not chasing money.

CHAPTER SIX

The Lion's Bank Account

The speaker drew a comparison.

Employee	Entrepreneur
Puts own money in bank	Others put money in bank
Saves from salary	Receives from value
Worries about running out	Worries about delivering more
Counts coins	Counts people bringing coins

"The lion does not count coins. The lion counts how many people are bringing coins."

Priya counted coins. Rohan counted customers.

CHAPTER SIX

The Story of the Chaiwala

The speaker told a story.

"There is a chaiwala in Mumbai. He sells tea on a footpath. His chai costs ₹10. He sells 500 cups a day. Revenue: ₹5,000 per day. Profit: maybe ₹2,000 per day.

Every day, he puts ₹500 in a box under his bed. He does not have a bank account. He does not have an EMI.

After one year, he had ₹1.8 lakhs in the box. He bought a bigger cart. He hired an assistant.

After three years, he had a small shop. After five years, he had three shops.

Today, he is 50. He owns a chai franchise. He has 50 employees. He never went to college. He never got a job. He never had a salary.

"He is a lion. And he started with a kettle and a footpath."

CHAPTER SIX

Find Your Balloon

The speaker gave the students an exercise.

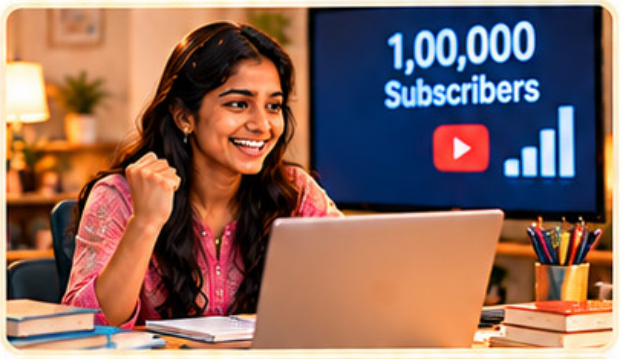
"What costs you near-zero but could sell for high value?"

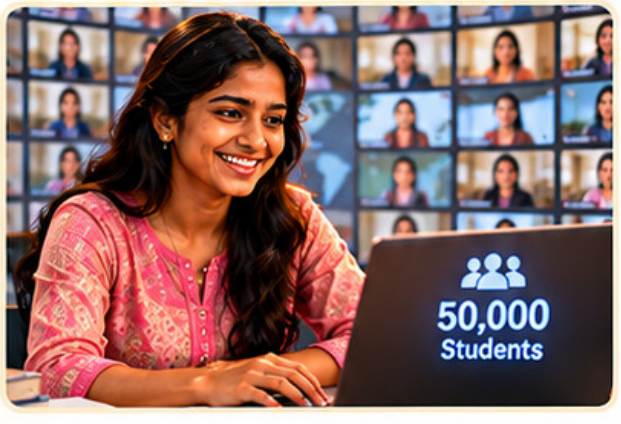
Your Balloon	Cost to You	Potential Selling Price	Potential ROI
Your knowledge of Excel	₹0 (you already know it)	₹500/hour tutoring	∞
Your skill in makeup	₹0	₹2,000 per client	∞
Your talent in photography	₹0	₹5,000 per shoot	∞
Your passion for fitness	₹0	₹1,000 per session	∞
Your knowledge of your father's business	₹0	A crore	∞

"Your balloon is waiting. Start twisting."

Rohan's balloon was his phone camera. Neha's balloon was her knowledge of data analytics. Murugan's balloon was his hands.

What is your balloon?





CHAPTER SIX

The Story of the Tuition Teacher

The speaker told a story.

"There was a girl in Lucknow. She was good at math. She started teaching her neighbor's child. Free.

The child's grades improved. The neighbor told another neighbor. Soon, she had 5 students. She started charging ₹500 per month per student.

Then she started teaching online. She made YouTube videos. She got 1 lakh subscribers. She launched a paid course. ₹999.

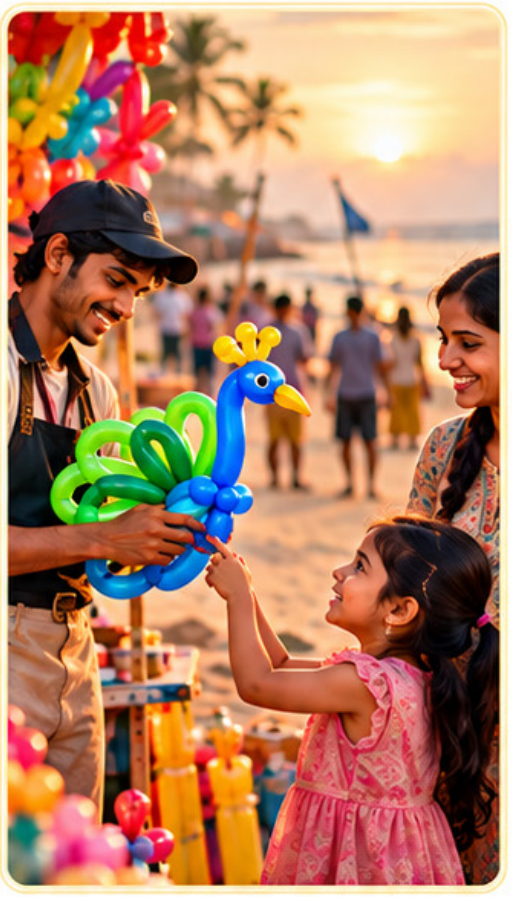
Today, she has 50,000 students. She earns more than any IIT graduate. She never left her house.

Her balloon was math. She twisted it into a career.

Her balloon was math.
She twisted it into a career."

CHAPTER SIX

The Difference Between Price and Value



The speaker said: “The balloon seller sells a balloon for ₹500. The balloon costs 50 paisa.

The customer is not paying for the balloon. The customer is paying for the peacock. For the 2 minutes of joy. For the smile on their child’s face.

Do not sell balloons. Sell peacocks. Do not sell your time. Sell the value you create. Do not sell your skill. Sell the transformation you provide.”

Chapter Six Summary

Truth	Lie
Small actions can create 1000x returns	You need big money to make money
Skill + location = wealth	Degree + job = wealth
Others put money in your pocket	You put money in your pocket

The Balloon Seller’s Lessons:

- Low barrier to entry (50 paisa)
- Skill matters (twisting)
- Location matters (beach with tourists)
- Margin matters (1000x)

Your Decision Today:

What is your balloon? What costs you nothing but could sell for something?

Chapter Six: Practical Exercises

Exercise 1: Find Your Balloon

	Your Balloon	Cost to You	Potential Selling Price	Potential ROI
1.	_____	₹0	₹_____	∞
2.	_____	₹0	₹_____	∞
3.	_____	₹0	₹_____	∞

Exercise 2: The 50 Paisa Challenge

What is the smallest thing you can create or do that someone would pay for?

Chapter Six: Quotes to Remember

Write these down. Paste them on your wall. Read them every morning.

> "Go to Pondicherry beach. Somebody's selling balloons. He is an entrepreneur to me."

> "50 paisa balloon is blowing with his hand and making it into a fiery peacock balloon. What is the return on investment? Thousand times!"

> "Which business is guaranteeing that?"

> "Your phone is your balloon. Your skill is your breath. Start twisting."

Chapter Six: The Lion's Roar

Stand up. Take a deep breath. Say this out loud:

> "I do not need big money to make money. I need a small balloon and the courage to twist it. My skill is my breath. My phone is my balloon. I will start small. I will grow big. The hunt begins with 50 paisa."

Now turn the page. The hunt continues.

The Story of Rohan's Balloon

Rohan's balloon was his phone camera. He had twisted it into a food review page. Then into a cloud kitchen. Then into a brand.

He started with 200 followers.
He had 2 lakh now.

He started with ₹0.
He had ₹1 lakh per month now.

He started alone.
He had 5 employees now.

His balloon was still twisting.
It would never stop.

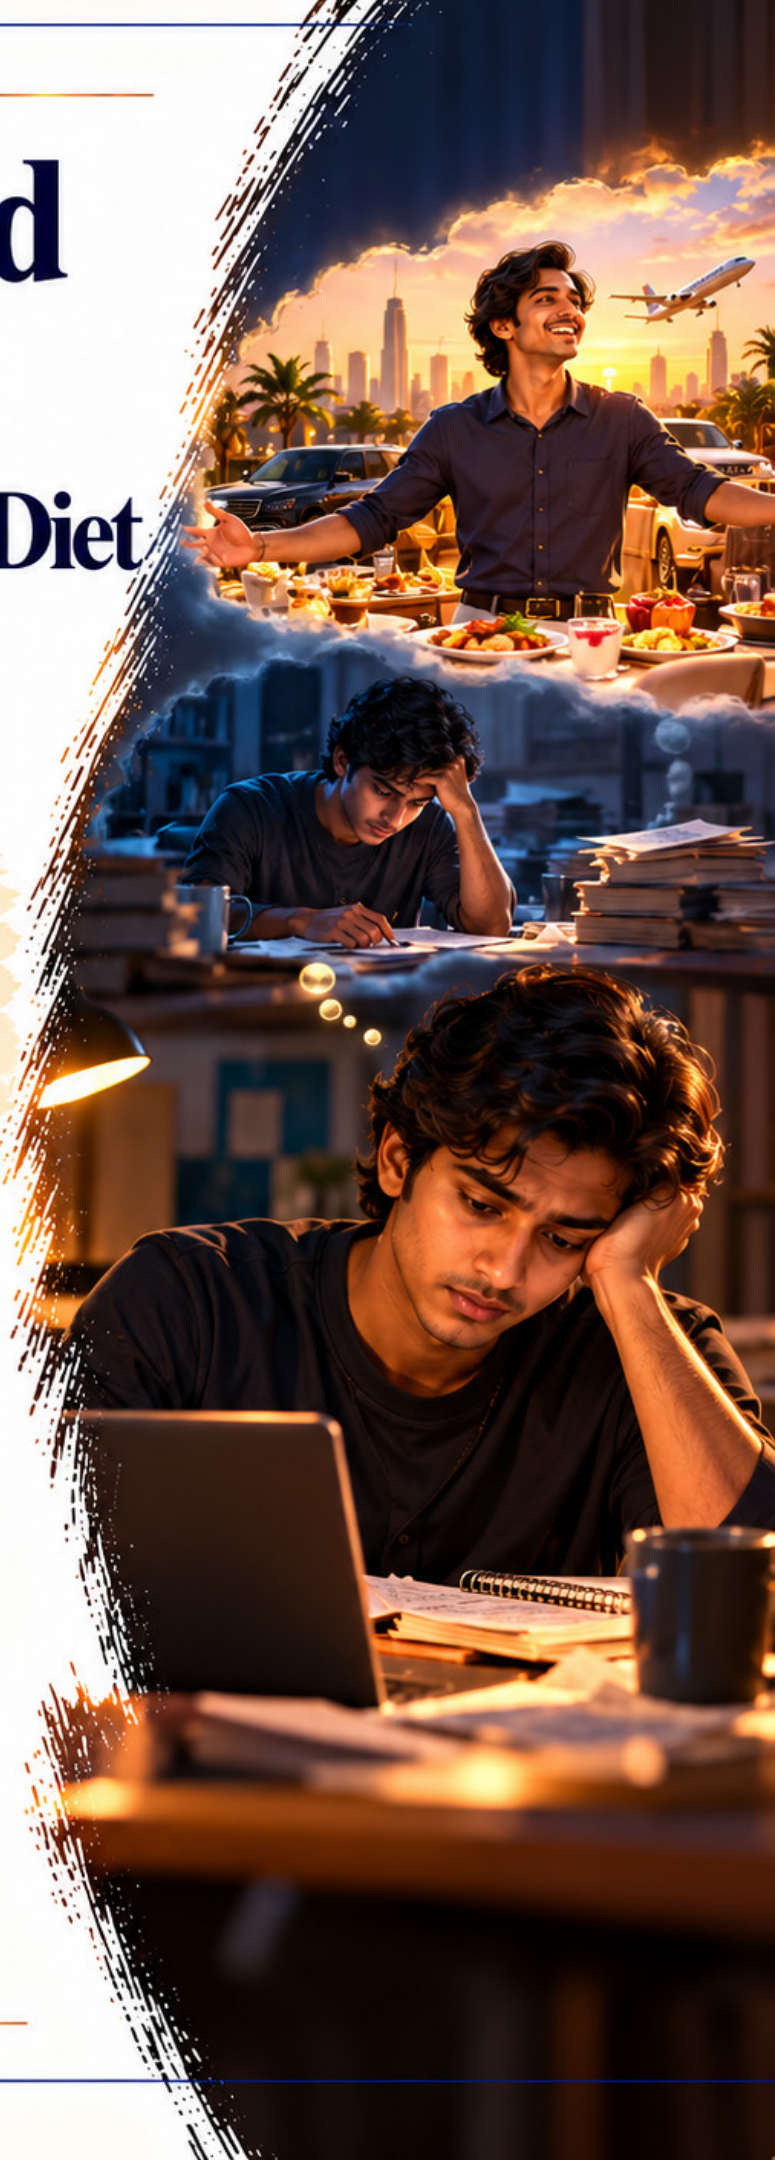
The Bridge to Chapter Seven

The speaker had shown them the cage. The first salary.
He had shown them the animals. The cat and the lion.
He had shown them the forgotten princes.
The Kauravas and the Pandavas.
He had shown them the gift. The family business.
He had shown them the temple. The MBA trap.
He had shown them the balloon. The 1000x return.

One chapter remained. The hardest chapter.
The chapter about the heart.

CHAPTER SEVEN

Fasting and Feasting: The Entrepreneur's Diet



Fasting and Feasting

"It is not every day's feasting. Most other days it is fasting and beating. Getting beaten."

The speaker's voice became softer. Slower. He was not shouting anymore. He was confessing.

"I have not told you the hard part yet," he said. "I have told you the dream. Now I will tell you the price."

CHAPTER SEVEN

The Story of Ritika the Brave

The Story of Ritika the Brave

The speaker told a story.

"In Jaipur, there was a girl named Ritika. She was 23. She started a sustainable fashion brand.

Month 1, 2, 3: ₹0 income. She made 50 samples. All rejected. Her mother called every day: 'When will you get a job?' Ritika cried in the bathroom.

Month 4: A small order came. ₹15,000. Ritika cried again. This time, happy tears.

Month 5, 6, 7: No orders. Instagram reach dropped. Her supplier cheated her. She lost ₹20,000.

Month 8: She bought defective fabric. Lost ₹50,000. She wanted to quit. She wanted to delete Instagram. She wanted to disappear.

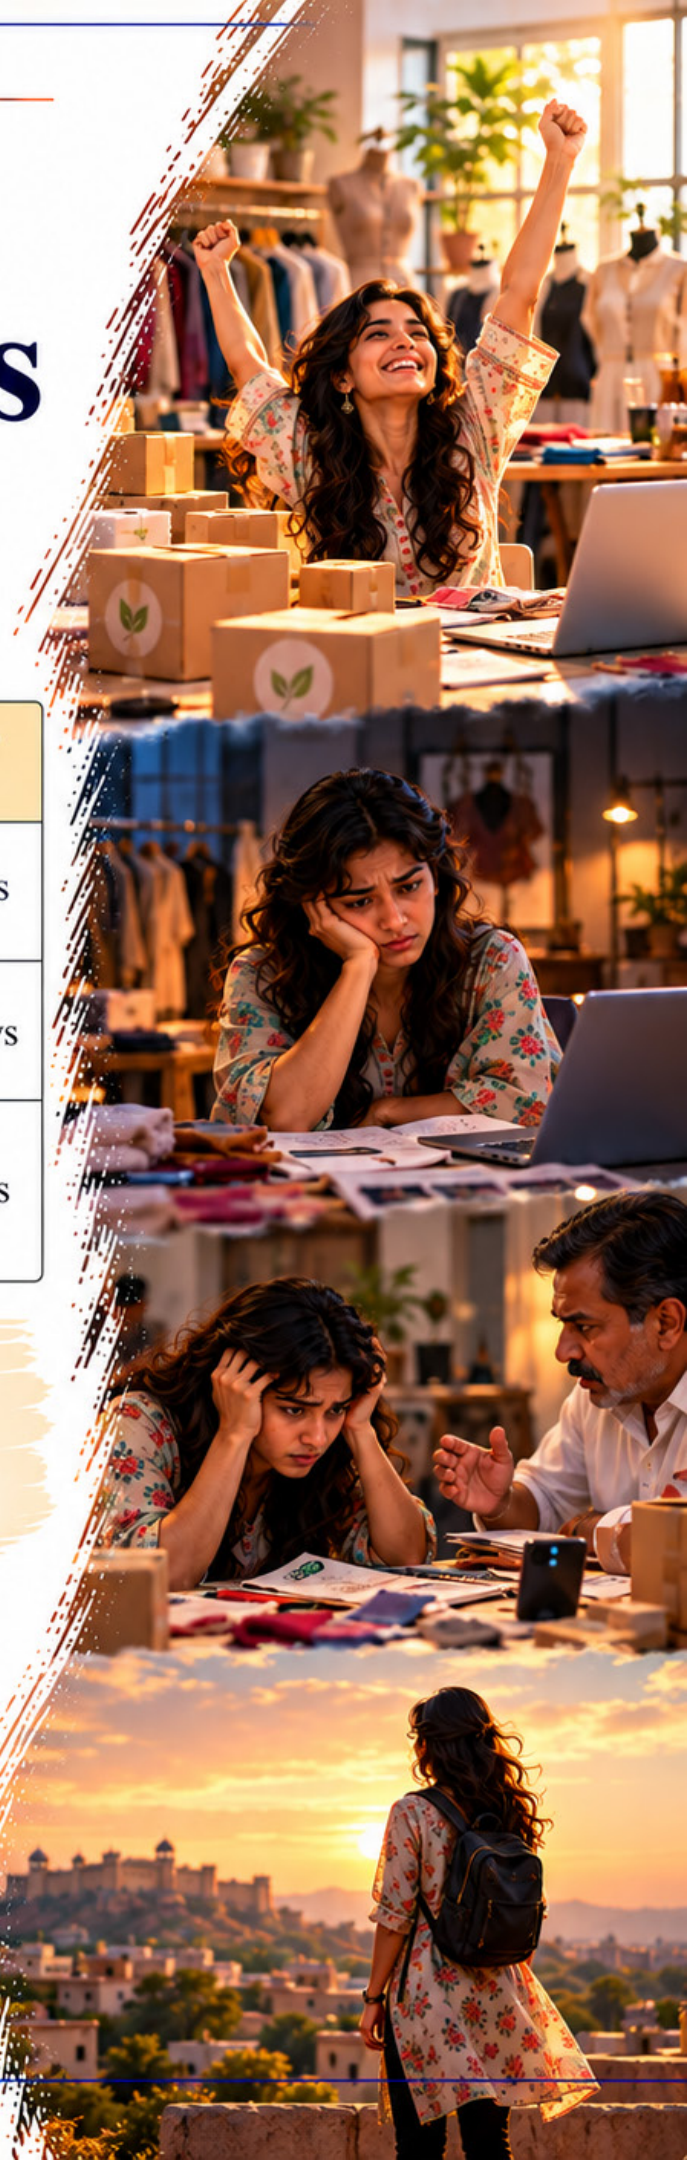
Month 9, 10, 11, 12: A small influencer featured her brand. Orders came. ₹2 lakhs in sales.

Year 2: Consistent ₹1 lakh per month. She hired two tailors. She hired a social media manager.

Ritika is not rich. Ritika is not safe.
But Ritika is not trapped.

CHAPTER SEVEN

The Three Kinds of Days



The Three Kinds of Days

The speaker drew on the board.

Type of Day	What It Looks Like	What to Do	Days per Month
Feasting Day	Orders coming, DMs blowing up	Celebrate, but SAVE	5-10 days
Fasting Day	No orders, no calls, no hope	Endure. Learn. Create content.	10-15 days
Getting Beaten Day	Customer yells, vendor cheats, payment fails	Survive. Do not quit.	5-10 days

> "This is the entrepreneur's calendar. This is the truth no one posts on Instagram."

Arjun had never had a fasting day.
He had never been beaten.
He was safe. He was also small.

Ritika had been beaten.
She was still standing.

CHAPTER SEVEN

The Heart vs. The Mind

The Heart vs. The Mind

The speaker said: “The stupid mind that is prepared in schools and colleges will not help you. You need to have your heart.”

Why the mind fails in entrepreneurship:

- The mind wants guarantees. Entrepreneurship has none.
- The mind wants a syllabus. Entrepreneurship has no syllabus.
- The mind wants a grade. Entrepreneurship gives you bankruptcy.

What the heart does:

- The heart endures the zeroes.
- The heart wakes up after a beating.
- The heart says ‘one more try.’

Arjun had a trained mind.
He did not have a trained heart.

Neha had a trained heart.
That is why she survived the six months of silence.

CHAPTER SEVEN

The Story of the Six Months of Silence

The Story of the Six Months of Silence

The speaker told Neha's story without using her name.

"There was a girl. She made YouTube videos.
For six months, no one watched.

Six months. 180 days. She talked to an empty room.
She posted videos that got 10 views. Her friends asked:
'Why are you wasting your time?"

Every night, she thought about quitting.
Every morning, she posted again.

On day 181, one video got 1,000 views.
On day 182, 10,000 views.
On day 183, 1 lakh views.

She cried. She had survived the fasting.
Now the feasting had begun.

> "Six months of fasting.
> One day of feasting.
> That is the entrepreneur's diet."

CHAPTER SEVEN

Your Failure Resume

Your Failure Resume

The speaker gave the students an exercise.

"Write down your last three failures. Next to each, write one lesson you would never have learned without it."

Failure	Age	Lesson That No College Could Teach
Example: Failed a subject	19	I am not defined by grades
Ritika: Lost ₹50,000 to defective fabric	23	Always check samples before bulk order
Neha: 6 months of zero views	24	Consistency beats talent
Rohan: 50 cafes rejected his collaboration	21	Rejection is redirection

> "Your failure resume is more valuable than your achievement resume."

Arjun had no failure resume.
He had never failed. He had never learned.

CHAPTER SEVEN

The Story of the 100 Rejections

The Story of the 100 Rejections

The speaker told a story.

"There was a man. He wanted to start a business. He wrote a business plan. He went to 100 investors.

99 said no. One said yes.

He took the yes. He built the business. He became a billionaire.

Years later, someone asked him: 'What was the hardest part?'

He said: 'The 99 no's. Every no felt like a death. But every no taught me something. After 50 no's, I learned to pitch better. After 80 no's, I learned to listen better. After 99 no's, I learned to not take rejection personally.

The 100th investor did not invest in my business. He invested in the person who survived 99 rejections.'

> "Do not fear rejection. Fear not trying."

CHAPTER SEVEN

The Paradox of Laziness

The Paradox of Laziness

"If you want to be super lazy, super cozy, become an entrepreneur."
The speaker explained.

Years 1 - 5	Years 5 - 10	Years 10+
Work like a dog	Build systems	Work less than any employee
No weekends	Hire team	Delegate everything
Maggi and anxiety	Some stability	Royal lazy

The employee works moderately for 40 years. The entrepreneur works brutally for 5-10 years, then rests.

Ritika was in Year 2. She was still working like a dog. But she could see Year 5. She could see the systems. She could see the rest.

Arjun was in Year 2 of his job. He was already tired. He had 38 more years to go.

CHAPTER SEVEN

Shouldering Responsibility

Shouldering Responsibility

"The heart is what is going to shoulder responsibility. The entrepreneurshiip space is all about shouldering responsibility."

The speaker's voice was heavy.

"When you are an employee, you are responsible for your desk. When you are an entrepreneur, you are responsible for every desk. Every salary. Every family that depends on you."

That weight is what makes some people return to jobs. And what makes others become lions.

Can you carry that weight? If not, stay a cat. The cat has no weight. The cat also has no kingdom."

> "Can you carry that weight?
> If not, stay a cat.
> The cat has no weight.
> The cat also has no kingdom."

CHAPTER SEVEN

The Story of the First Salary

The Story of the First Salary

The speaker returned to where he began.

"Remember Priya? She took the job. She bought the iPhone. She rented the flat. She ordered Swiggy."

She is not poor. She is trapped.

She cannot leave because of the EMIs. She cannot dream because of the rent. She cannot build because of the tiredness.

Priya is a cat. She chose the bowl. She chose the cage. She chose the wall.

> "Do not be Priya.
> Be Rohan. Be Neha. Be Ritika.
> Be the lion."

Chapter Seven: Quotes to Remember

Chapter Seven: Quotes to Remember

Write these down. Paste them on your wall. Read them every morning.

> "It is not every day's feasting. Most other days it is fasting and beating. Getting beaten."

> "Everywhere you go for hunting, you will get hunted."

> "The stupid mind that is prepared in schools and colleges will not help you. You need to have your heart."

> "The road to lazy royalty is paved with fasting and beatings. Accept it. Or stay a cat."

Chapter Seven: The Lion's Roar

Stand up. Take a deep breath. Say this out loud:

> "I am not afraid of fasting. I am not afraid of getting beaten. I am not afraid of the zeroes. My heart is stronger than my mind. I will endure. I will learn. I will rise. The feast is coming. But first, I must fast."

Now turn the page. The conclusion awaits.

CHAPTER SEVEN

The Final Words

The Final Words

> "If you are going to be an employee, life will be safe as a cat on the wall.
> You will not fall. But you will always have a dilemma in your mind:
> I should have chosen entrepreneurship. I should have chosen entrepreneurship.
> Stop thinking that way. Today, go.
> Thank you. Love you. Love you. Love you so much."

The speaker left the stage.
The lights came on.
Three hundred students sat in silence.
Some of them were crying. Some of them were laughing.
Some of them were already on their phones, making changes.

Arjun was one of them. He had already quit his job. He had already started his coding bootcamp. He was in his third month of fasting. He had 12 students. He was losing money. He was scared. But he was not trapped. He was a lion in training.

Rohan was not in the auditorium. He was in his cloud kitchen, packing orders. He had 2 lakh followers. He had 5 employees. He was feasting.

Neha was not there either. She was in her home studio, recording a video. She had 3 lakh subscribers. She had bought her parents a house. She was feasting.

Vikram was there. He had decided not to go to the MBA. He was learning his father's factory. He was starting from the bottom. He was fasting.

Priya was there. She was still at TCS. She was still paying EMIs. She was still trapped. But she was thinking. She was wondering. She was asking herself: "What if?"

CHAPTER SEVEN

The Last Page

The Last Page

This is not the end of the book.
This is the beginning of your life.
Stand up. Right now. Wherever you are.
Raise both hands above your head. Show your face to the mirror if there is one.
Show your face to the wall if there is not.
Take a deep breath. Fill your lungs like a lion filling its chest before a roar.
And declare out loud:

> "I am not a cat.
> I am not a rat.
> I am a lion.
> The hunt begins today."

Now close this book.
Open your laptop. Open your phone. Open your notebook.
And start.
One small step. One small sale. One small post. One small customer.
That is how lions are made.
Not in one day. But one day.

THE END

— But only for the cats.
For the lions, this is only the beginning.

CHAPTER SEVEN

The 5 Laws of the Lion

Law	Rule
1	Never taste the monthly salary if you want to be free.
2	Do not be a Kaurava. Be a Pandava. Know your weapon.
3	Multiply your family's legacy by 10x or 20x.
4	Reject the MBA that trains employees.
5	Let others put their money in your pocket.

If you have read this far, you are not a cat.

Now go. Hunt.
The jungle is waiting.

Stop Chasing Rats. Start Hunting Deer.

For generations, we have been taught to chase safety, not freedom. To collect salaries, not create value. To follow the crowd, not discover our own path. The Lion's Bank Account is a bold wake-up call for every young Indian who refuses to live an average life.

With powerful stories, timeless wisdom, and practical frameworks, this book will help you break free from the rat race, build real skills, create wealth, and design a life of purpose and freedom. It is not just a book — it is a roadmap to becoming a lion.

Inside This Book, You Will Discover:

- Why the first salary can become a trap
- The mindset shift from employee to creator
- The 5 Laws of the Lion for wealth and freedom
- Real-life stories of young Indians who are building beyond the 9-to-5
- Practical steps to create multiple income streams
- How to multiply your family's legacy
- Why execution matters more than information

This is your time.
Be a lion. Build a life worth living.
